In accordance with a time-honored custom the Methodist Churches of the city will unite in a thanksgiving service. The Preachers' Meeting has selected Carondelet Street Church as the place for the service, and appointed Rev. S. J. Davies to preach the sermon.

Suffering is the price that must be paid for perfect patience.

Some people would rather cast a shadow all around them than to send out sunbeams.

Usually it is not the man who has wronged you whom you can not forgive, but the one whom you have wronged.

The greatest need of the world today is men and women whose whole lives are dominated by a great moral purpose.

When you find yourself fretting and worrying, ask, "What good will it do?" and then go on if you find that it pays.

William Penn says: "Sense shines with a double luster when it is set in humility. An able and yet humble man is a jewel worth a kingdom."

It is a mistake to suppose that fidelity to God requires us to be disagreeable to our fellow men. The holiest man ought to be the most lovable.

He spends more than a hundred dollars a year for cigars and tobacco, and then growls if his wife wants a dollar for missions, or some other good cause. Did you ever see him?

Christianity appeals to the very highest aspirations of the human heart. It proposes to take a poor worm of the dust and make of him a being like unto Christ. Know you any hope or ambition loftier than this?

Most men are blind; they can not see the golden opportunities that are passing by every day. Many who see fail to make use of these ladders to earthly success and heavenly glory. Others who make some effort at utilizing their opportunities work so half-heartedly that their achievements are but a tithe of their possibilities.

May it not be that you are mistaken in saying that God does not answer your prayers? Perhaps he has answered in the negative. As regards temporal blessings, he has never promised always to give us just what we ask for, but something far better so—what is for our good. Just as a mother often finds it necessary to deny the requests of her children for their good, so God reserves to himself the prerogative of withholding from his children those objects of desire that would be hurtful to them. Prayer for temporal blessings should always close thus, "Not my will, but thine be done."

The Need of Courage.

The same qualities that make a man a good soldier must also be exhibited, though in a different way, by the Christian. Courage, fortitude, vigilance, obedience, and ability to fight are no less essential to success in warring against the spiritual hosts of wickedness than in merely carnal contests. A true soldier must be, above all things, a courageous man. Cowards and deserters are a curse to any cause. Without the bravery born of devotion to duty in the face of impending danger and death, no army could ever hope to win victory. Numbers signify little when courage is wanting. Soldiers, though well-drilled, well-armed, and well-fed, if lacking in bravery, are almost worthless as fighters. Look how, at Thermopylæ, Leonidas and his noble little Spartan band for three days kept back the numberless hosts of the proud Persian, Xerxes!

Likewise in the war against sin and Satan courage is sorely needed. Thousands who enlist under the Master's banner are so timorous, so afraid of stirring up opposition or ridicule, that they either compromise with the enemy, or do nothing against him. Everywhere and always we need courage to say "No" to the tempter, whether man or devil. Not many young men would have courage enough to do as did Daniel in refusing to "defile himself with the king's meat, and with the wine which he drank;" but, because he was true to the right, God took care of him, and brought him into great favor. How oft may moral defection and ruin be traced to lack of moral courage! Compromise means weakness and almost certain defeat. It is said that Sir Isaac Newton's most intimate friend in young manhood was a noted foreign chemist. One day, however, this friend told an impure story, after which Newton would never associate with him. Would that there were more like Newton!

Faint-hearted, milk-and-water Christians are not the ones to wage crusades against the saloon, the gambling evil, Sabbath desecration, social impurity, or any other evil. Christians should fear nothing but God, and hate nothing but sin. It is natural for those who are conscious of being in the right to be courageous. As the Scripture says: "The righteous are bold as a lion; but the wicked flee when no man pursueth." The reason why many professors of religion are not more bold is because they are not fully the Lord's. Their lives being full of inconsistency, they fear to take a decided stand against this or that evil, lest their own sins and shortcomings be exposed by the enemy. He who is guilty of any evil habit dare not reprove another. We must first sweep before our own door, and then we can have boldness to tell our neighbor of the rubbish before his door. A godly man, however, can say with the poet:

"My strength is as the strength of ten,
Because my heart is pure."

Sin ever seeks the cover of darkness. Saloonists, gamblers, and evil-doers of all kinds writhe when their iniquity is painted in its true colors, and often villify those who oppose them. But the truth needs to be told, even though it grievously offends. "Light is good; but sore eyes don't like it." It took a deal of courage for Nathan to obey God in rebuking David for his great sin. The prophet did not know but that his faithfulness would cost him his life. Yet the salvation of the king, as well as the religious welfare of the Jewish nation, demanded the strictest fidelity to duty. Nathan might have said: "Let God send some other man to the king. I do not think it best for me to go."

Many a church member shifts the responsibility of admonishing an erring brother upon somebody else's shoulders. Some imagine that because their influence is small, it is useless to reprove evil-doers, or to urge officers of the law to do their duty. Silence, however, is often criminal. He who never condemns a known wrong makes himself a party to it.

Not everything that passes for courage, however, is the real article. A boaster may lead men to believe that he is not afraid of the devil himself. The shock of battle will tell. Peter protested to his Lord that though all the rest should forsake him, yet would not he. But, alas! impulsive Peter did not know himself, and shortly denied his Lord with bitter oaths. The Christian who boasts of his daring and strength is on the verge of defeat. Churchmen sometimes gain credit for boldness upon very small foundation, as, for instance, by tirades against minor evils, making much ado about nothing. Some religious teachers actually declaim as loudly and frequently against frills and furbelows, the wearing of jewelry, and the use of tobacco, as they do against intemperance, dishonesty, gambling, and lewdness. The habit of criticising and abusing church authorities, which is popular in certain quarters of our Zion, is, we suspect, due to impudence, censoriousness, and love of applause, rather than to genuine courage.

Boldness is a very desirable and necessary quality, but it should always be accompanied by humility, sincerity, and sound judgement. Soldiers do not fight merely for the sake of fighting. Recklessness is by no means a virtue. Where principle is at stake we should ever be firm as a rock; but in matters of expediency there is large place for prudence and gentleness. Some men do not distinguish between bravery and obstinacy, though they are as unlike as the lion and the donkey. A stubborn man in any church is sure to be a source of trouble. Advice is thrown away upon him, reproof he mistakes for persecution, and persists in his own course, though it may be injurious to the church and an occasion of stumbling to his fellow-man. He is "wiser in his own conceit than seven men who can render a reason."

Courage and hopefulness are near of kin. A courageous man can hardly help being hopeful. The determination to stand firm, whatever betide, brings confidence and repose. Fortitude, or passive courage, is less often met with than the other kind, yet it is even more necessary. The battle is half gained when we have made up our minds to do or to suffer, according as God wills. Then it is that grace is furnished freely, and we are prepared to "fight the good fight of faith." Says Dr. Joseph Parker: "Many men can fight who can not suffer; many are brave in activity who are cowards in waiting. To say 'No' to a tempting offer is to win a battle; to receive a blow from an enemy, and not to return it, is to reach the point of coronation in Christ's kingdom."

A. J. Diaz.

A. J. Diaz, the celebrated Cuban Baptist minister, whose execution by the Spanish butcher, Woyler, was prevented a few months since only by the timely interposition of the strong arm of the United States government, spent last Sabbath in this city.

On Saturday night he addressed a meeting of Cubans in his native tongue. On Sunday he delivered three addresses in English at the three Baptist Churches of the city, one of which it was our privilege to hear. We regret exceedingly that we did not hear the others. Many of our readers are doubtless more or less familiar with his movements since his arrival in the United States, the secular papers having made frequent mention of him. He has made a tour through many of the Northern States and his peregrinations have been one continuous ovation.

The notices of him which we have seen, however, previous to his arrival in New Orleans have not painted him as he is. It is an egregious mistake to regard him simply as a patriot pleading the cause of his native land. He is that, but he is much more than that. He is above everything else a minister of the gospel of Christ. He believes every syllable of the Word of God with all his heart, soul, mind and strength; and his ardent, implicit faith in things unseen has fired his heart and loosed his tongue and made him a powerful instrumentality in pulling down the strongholds of Satan's kingdom. He magnifies the Holy Ghost as the source of all spiritual life. No Methodist—not even John Wesley himself—ever believed more implicitly in conscious regeneration as the result of the direct operation of the Holy Spirit. When discoursing upon this theme he might easily be mistaken for a Methodist of the primitive type.

The story of his conversion, of his entrance into the Christian ministry, of the conversion of his mother and father through his instrumentality, and of the toils and triumphs of the intervening years, is to us as thrilling as a romance. We esteem it a very great privilege to have had an opportunity to hear him. Although he does not see everything through our spectacles, we can nevertheless give him the right hand of fellowship and bid him God-speed in his labor of love. We fear that we shall envy him his crown in the day when God gathers up his jewels.

Believing that it will not only be interesting in itself, but stimulating to the faith and zeal of the church, we have arranged to give in our next issue a sketch of some of the more salient features of his very remarkable career.

For the foregoing very accurate likeness of him we are indebted to our neighbor, the New Orleans Picayune.

Bishop Galloway in Boston.

Bishop Galloway's Boston address on the negro question is highly complimented by the Northern papers. We quote as follows from Zion's Herald:

Bishop Galloway is so profound and sincere a Methodist, and his heart is so large and catholic, that his aspirations and service can not be confined to his own church. His love and his works must constantly overflow as a blessing to all churches and to all peoples. His magnificent record as the life-long friend and helper of the negro opens the hearts of New Englanders, particularly, to him. Perhaps no white man living has preached so often to the colored people or mingled more freely with them to do them good. He came to Boston last week to deliver an address at the jubilee meeting of the American Missionary Association, noticed in another column. We listened with much pleasure to his address, which was pertinent, forceful and eloquent. His thoroughly frank utterances were received with marked and general expressions of gratification by the large audience which listened to him. The Bishop is one of the most genial of men in social companionship. He visited Bishop Foster in his home, whom he greatly admires and loves, and characterizes the sermon which he heard him preach at Baltimore as the greatest he ever heard in his life.

In the Living Present.

The American University in Washington, D. C., is ostensibly a Methodist enterprise. Bishop Hurst, the originator, is regent. The first building of same was recently dedicated. The regent said that twenty-five per cent. of donations had come from non-Methodists. Six Protestant denominations were represented in the Trustee Board, etc.

A humorous sheet in Madrid, Spain, is printed not on paper, but cotton cloth. When contents are perused the sheet is washed and serves as handkerchief. The enterprise is successful. Sorry that certain papers in our country do not adopt a similar plan. In such case they would be of actual benefit, which now they are not.

The New York Evening Post laments the loss of influence of editorials. It has been proven in many instances that the editorial columns have been subject to the highest bidder. The paper's policy shaped by the ready cash paid by parties who sought advocacy of certain measures. Editorials are looked upon by readers as advertisements. Most publishers consider their publications a mercantile enterprise. They care not for glory, they want dollars. Their guiding-star is not principle, but the dollar.

Dr. Lyman Abbott discusses in his paper Christ's standard of values. Holds that existing views are radically erroneous. Christ had taught that not money, but men were the standard of value. That labor is not a commodity. But Christ's teaching, though revolutionary, was not anarchical. It would not lead to bloodshed, but operated like leaven. Thinks that the present relation of employer and employee would cease. Co-operation would be generally adopted.

The predecessor of Pope Leo XIII. called France "the most faithful daughter of the church." But since then vast changes have taken place. Since the dethronement of Louis Napoleon nearly all the leaders of political affairs in France have been atheists. The great idol, Gambetta, was an Israelite. Twenty-five per cent. of burials are unattended by clergy. In the rural districts, according to reports, fealty to the Romish Church is increasing.

The Evangelical Alliance of the United States has issued a call for the observance of a Quiet Day. Appointed Nov. 17. In the morning of said day, after fasting, all the ministers of every community should assemble, not for speech-making, but for prayer. The laity should be invited to participate in the evening. All pray for a true revival of religion.

Not all our people look upon men past the meridian of life as "old iron." The Legislature of Vermont has re-elected Justin S. Merril, an octogenarian, as Senator of the United States. He has uninterruptedly served in that capacity since 1867. Some of the greatest battles have been superintended by men more than sixty years of age. At eighty some men have displayed wonderful statesmanship. Old physicians and old lawyers are in demand. But our churches clamor for young men. Is such clamor indicative of intense spirituality or lack of same?

ICH DIEN.

A New Book.

THE WAY TO CHRIST MADE PLAIN. By W. M. Leftwich, D. D. Price, 10 cents. Nashville, Tenn.: Publishing House of the M. E. Church, South. Barbee & Smith, agents. 1896.

Through the courtesy of the distinguished author, the above-named pamphlet lies upon our table. It is a small pamphlet of 72 pages, divided into four chapters with the following titles: Practical Repentance, The Law of Confession, The Faith of the Heart; Faith, Fact and Feeling.

The title is accurately descriptive of the work. It is not controversial, but practical. Its sole aim is to point out the way to Christ so plainly that none need err. It is thoroughly scriptural. We heartily recommend it to pastors and others who feel the need of a short, concise treatise for circulation among those who are under conviction, but have not yet found the "pearl of great price." We bespeak for it an extensive sale.

Gone Home.

Sister M. R. Barrington, widow of the late Rev. A. M. Barrington, died yesterday evening, Nov. 8, at two o'clock. She passed away peacefully. More extended notice will be given later. M. L. BURTON.

Crystal Springs, Miss., Nov. 9, 1896.

[The above note from Bro. Burton will be read with sorrow by a numerous circle of friends of the deceased and of her sainted husband. Sister Barrington was a most excellent Christian woman—one whose influence was always felt upon the side of the right.—EDITOR.]

NOTES.

We invite the attention of all the North Mississippi brethren to the communication of Bro. Bachman on our fifth page.

Rev. Malachi B. Sharbrough, recently transferred to the Los Angeles Conference, has been appointed presiding elder of the Los Angeles district.

Rev. Ira B. Robertson, of the Mississippi Conference, was a welcome caller at the ADVOCATE office a few days since. He is spending a few days with his daughter, Mrs. E. S. Baldwin.

Rev. W. M. Leftwich, D. D., will begin his meeting at Caroudelet Street Church on Wednesday night. Let the Methodists of New Orleans turn out in full force to make the meeting a decided success.

Millsaps College has an enrollment of more than 200 pupils, with more to follow. The Law Department has 23 pupils—a very remarkable showing in view of the fact that this department is in its infancy.

Rev. J. M. Porter, of the Indian Mission Conference, has been appointed principal of the Creek High School at Eufala, Indian Territory. This institution has four teachers and one hundred pupils, all boarding in the school.

Miss May Sharbrough, daughter of Rev. F. W. Sharbrough (deceased), was lately married to Mr. Bert Davis, of Alice, Texas. The wedding took place at Laredo Seminary (Texas), from which institution Miss May was graduated at its last commencement.

Mrs. Mary McGee Snell passed through the city last week en route to Los Angelos, Cal., where she has an engagement to hold a meeting. She honored the ADVOCATE office with a call. Much to our regret we failed to meet her, being absent from the city at the time.

A brother writes us that those of his flock who take the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE are the people who attend church most regularly and who pay the preacher and give a cordial support to the institutions of the church. Those who do not read their church paper, he says, are of very little value to the church.

Rev. W. T. Woodward, of the Louisiana Conference, has put the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE into every family in his charge, with three exceptions. This is an example worthy of imitation. If every pastor would give us co-operation after this fashion, we could make many improvements in the paper.

Rev. N. M. Clarke, of the Mississippi Conference, died at Laurel, Miss., on the fourth, after an illness of more than forty days. He was buried at Enterprise. In his death the church loses a diligent, faithful minister of the gospel, who was always true to his convictions. His end was peace. We expect to meet him by and by.

Dr. J. J. Lyons, a prominent physician of this city, died on the seventh, and was buried from Rayne Memorial Church on Sunday afternoon, the funeral services being conducted by the pastor, Rev. F. N. Parker, assisted by Rev. F. S. Parker. The services were largely attended. Dr. Lyons was one of the officials of Rayne Memorial Church, and was a man of fine Christian character. He was the husband of Mrs. F. A. Lyons, who is well known to our readers.

Rev. J. Vital, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, was present at the New Orleans Preachers' Meeting on Monday morning. Bro. Vital came to this city less than two years ago from Rome, Italy, and began mission work among his countrymen who, as is well known, are numerous in these parts. He has now a membership of twenty-two. He has secured a building eligible for his two-fold work of preaching and teaching at a cost of $8,000, about one-half of which has been paid. Bro. Vital was a Romish priest for eight years. He has a brother in the M. E. Church who was in the priesthood for thirteen years. Thus we see that Rome is not proof against the leaven of pure, unadulterated Christianity. The Presbyterians have an Italian Church of respectable dimensions in this city ministered to by a man who was reared in the lap of Romanism, and who, if we mistake not, was a priest for some years.

At the recent Lord Mayor's banquet, in London, Lord Salisbury, Prime Minister of Great Britain, delivered an elaborate address, in which he stated that the Venezuelan controversy has been amicably settled. He said that Great Britain has been willing all along to arbitrate the dispute as to all unsettled portions of the territory in question, though she has been unwilling to do so as to the territory which is occupied by British subjects. The principle of settlement agreed upon is that "the title to the district settled by British subjects will be determined by the same rules whereby private ownership of land is fixed. Peaceable, undisputed possession for a definite length will be deemed a valid title." The authorities at Washington will have to be heard from before the full particulars will be known, but Lord Salisbury's speech is a guarantee that the trouble is ended—a result which will be hailed with joy throughout the civilized world. One more step has been taken in the direction of the settlement of international disputes by arbitration instead of by war. May God speed the day when the soldier's occupation will be gone!

North Mississippi Conference Notice.

The North Mississippi Conference edition of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE will be issued immediately after our Conference session, and will contain full proceedings of the same and other important matter pertaining to our work.

We have arranged for 10,000 extra copies of this paper for gratuitous distribution among our people, and if the brethren who have not yet responded by the "return postal" sent them will do so directly and as liberally as those have who have responded, it will enable the publisher to give us a larger issue or a larger paper.

We expect this to exceed any past issue of our excellent Conference paper, both in extent of circulation and in the amount of reading matter specially appropriate to our Conference interests.

The design of this enterprise is not, in anywise, to supersede the publication of our Conference Minutes in pamphlet form, but to supplement the same in a manner by which they can be put at once within the reach of all our people, and at the same time put for once a copy of our church paper in every Methodist home within our bounds.

Brethren of the ministry and laity, help us in this laudable undertaking with your means and prayers, and it will be fruitful of good to the people and honoring to our worthy Conference organ. Who that has not yet spoken will help, and how much, to be paid at Conference? Write me quickly, so that we may know what to depend upon.

Will all who know of any special books that they will want at Conference let me know in due time that I may have them there. Especially will the under-graduates please let me know at once the books of the course of study that they will want.

G. W. BACHMAN.

Enochaka, Miss., Nov. 6.

Rosedale, La.

According to announcement, on Oct. 25, the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, at Rosedale, La., was dedicated to the worship of Almighty God. Rev. J. M. Henry, of New Orleans, preached the dedicatory sermon, which was appropriate, strong, eloquent, and appreciated by a large, attentive audience. It was a great occasion for our people to see their hopes realized in the form of a neat house of worship—all paid for. The total cost of lot, house and furniture amounts to $1,215.70. Of this the Conference Board of Church Extension donated $89.25.

Truly this little flock and their friends wrought well. It has given an impetus to Methodism in this community which heretofore it did not possess. We have had fourteen accessions here this year. The writer feels much indebted to his people for their kindness and patience, having been with them three years.

A New Bread.

Persons who suffer from diabetes know how tasteless and unpalatable are the inevitable bran bread and other substitutes that have heretofore been proscribed by physicians to take the place of wheat bread, and how soon they pall upon the appetite and make meal time an event to be dreaded. That such need be no longer the case diabetic patients are indebted to Messrs. Farwell & Rhines, of Watertown, N. Y. These manufacturers have placed upon the bill of fare for sufferers from this disease a special Diabetic Flour which is not only free from starch and other deleterious substances, but makes appetizing and delicious bread. Special Diabetic Flour is prescribed by physicians both in this and other countries. A sample will be sent free to anyone upon receipt of name and address.

Railroad Rates to North Mississippi Conference.

Members of North Mississippi Conference will get the usual four-cent rate on the certificate plan. Get a certificate every time you buy a full-fare ticket going. All agents are required to give you a certificate on application and need no special instructions to do so. Only a few have signified their intention to come on special coach from Memphis, Wednesday, the twenty-fifth. Unless I get forty, I can not afford to charter a coach. Let everybody who will come that way that day write me here.

J. A. RANDOLPH.

Greenville, Miss.

Reduced Rates to the Louisiana Conference.

The following railroad lines will give one and one-third rates on the certificate plan: The Queen and Crescent, the Texas and Pacific, the Yazoo and Mississippi Valley, the N. O. and N. W. road, and the Missouri and Pacific road.

All persons will pay full fare from where they take the train to Ruston, getting a certificate from the agent to that effect, which will secure you one-third rate returning, if countersigned by the secretary of the Conference.

A Vote of Thanks.

At a meeting of the St. John's Church membership, Whitington circuit, Mississippi Conference, a unanimous vote of thanks was passed to Mrs. Carre and Mrs. Philip Werlein for their gift of the organ; to Bro. J. C. McAllister for securing chairs to seat the church, and to all our generous friends in New Orleans who helped us to build the church.

For the congregation.

J. B. WALKER.

From "Gilderoy."

While laid up Bro. J. B. Streater fills my appointments for me at Black Hawk. He preaches, or, what is better, reads a sermon to the congregation, as did Mrs. Wesley in the absence of her husband. Such laymen are helpers indeed. Would that we had more of this sort.

A Christmas Trip.

The thousands of Texans who came from the South Atlantic States find much pleasure in reverting to the happy days of long ago when they were children, and often they awake at night to recall those scenes of yore which gave to life a charm, and which now come in later years as visions of joy. There is a tender spot in every heart for the old home, and the memories which cluster about the dear old spot are solaces in the weary, weary struggle we make day by day to build in our new Eldorado a home to which our children in future time will turn, as we turn now to the old place where our loved ones in the evening of life await the final summons.

The Texas and Pacific Railway Company again offers you the opportunity to go "back to the old home." Round trip excursion tickets will be on sale from all points on the system on Dec. 21 and 22, 1896, to points in the Southeastern States, at one fare for the round trip, tickets good 30 days from date of sale. See your nearest ticket agent for further information, and do not fail to send eight cents postage to the undersigned for a copy of the finest publication on Texas ever issued, to show to your friends at home.

A Great Nerve Tonic,
Horsford's Acid Phosphate.

Dr. I. HARRIS HALL, State Lunatic Asylum, Milledgeville, Ga., says: "It is undoubtedly a great nerve tonic."

Members Mississippi Conference.

Several persons have written to me to know about the connection of the trains going to Conference at Port Gibson. For the benefit of those coming from the central and eastern parts of the Conference, I publish the following facts: The passenger train from Meridian arrives in Vicksburg at 11:35 A. M. The through freight leaves Vicksburg for Port Gibson at 3:30 P. M. Returning, the through freight leaves Port Gibson at 11:53 A. M., arriving in Vicksburg in ample time for the A. and V. train going east.

The Valley railroad people have agreed to put passenger coaches on the through freight on Monday, Nov. 30, and Tuesday, Dec. 1, for members going to Conference, and either on Monday, Dec. 7, or Tuesday, Dec. 8, for those returning. They wish all members and visitors who expect to go to Conference by this route to write to me what day they will be here, so that sufficient transportation may be provided.

Bear in mind that a certificate that full fare has been paid must be procured from each agent selling tickets. Buy tickets in Vicksburg from the up town office, corner of Washington and Crawford streets, as the office in the station will not be opened for the through freights.

From Baton Rouge.

Bro. Frank Parker spent several days with me, and his preaching wrought blessed results in the heart of the church. Sixty-five testified to being blessed and revived, and eleven united with the church. I carried on the meeting several days after his departure, until the arrival of Dr. Leftwich, and my membership has come within the gracious influence of his teaching. The educative preaching of this man of God is unfolding new life and light and love to their quickened hearts. Methodism in Baton Rouge has received "the expansive and expulsive power of a new affection," and has every reason to thank God and take courage.

H. W. RICKEY.

Baton Rouge, La., Nov. 7, 1896.

Our meeting under Dr. Leftwich has been a great success—one, if not the greatest revivals, known in this city. The Doctor began on the twenty-ninth, and, in spite of unfavorable weather, theaters and elections, the interest rapidly increased. Those who came once returned and brought others. He has the power to interest and hold all classes. If the people can be brought under his influence, he will hold them and good results will follow. Other denominations were drawn into co-operation, and a good work was done in these churches.

The house at night is packed. So far there has been some 60 or 70 conversions that we know of, and some twenty-odd accessions, though we expect the full results in the next few days. The church is wonderfully revived, backsliders reclaimed, and many resolved to lead a new life.

Water Valley, Miss.

Asking forgiveness for the liberty we take with his private correspondence, we quote as follows from a letter recently received from Rev. J. A. Bowen:

The Lord is blessing us in Water Valley. In addition to building Main Street Church, we are now repairing and painting Wood Street Church. Have received 127 members into Wood Street Church this year. This does not include the large number received by Bro. Clifford at Main Street. We are a united Methodism in Water Valley. We pray, work, and rejoice together. The Lord bless you and the ADVOCATE!

A Self-Supporting Widow.

About a year ago my husband died and left me in rather destitute circumstances. Just after our marriage his health failed, and for that reason he was unable to lay by for a rainy day. A friend of mine from Illinois called on me and told me how much money she was making by selling the Iron City Dish Washer, and said she thought I could at least make a good living by doing the same. I wrote the Iron City Dish Washer Co., Station A, Pittsburgh, Pa., for a sample. Since then I have been making a splendid living for my children and myself, and still attend to my household duties. Last month I cleared over $.60, and am delighted with my success. The Dish Washer works like a charm, and the distasteful work of washing dishes can be done in a few moments without soiling the hands a particle. Anyone who sees it work wants one at once, so they are no trouble to sell. I would advise anyone out of employment to write for full particulars, as they started me in business and will do the same for others.

Butter Making—How to Churn In Two Minutes—Making Money Easy.

ONLY THOSE WHO HAVE CHURNED BUTTER, or an hour and a half on a warm day know how hard work it is to make butter, and everyone will be delighted with the news that a machine is now made by The Queen Butter Maker Co., of Cincinnati, by which butter can be made in from two to five minutes. Anybody can sell 5 a day and make $150 a month. The machine is made small enough so that any farmer churning from two to five gallons can use the churn. Anyone who wants to make money should secure the agency for the Butter Maker. M. T. Hibbs, Columbus, made butter in two minutes before six farmers, and sold five on the spot, making $12.50 in half an hour. Easy to make money. The Queen Butter Maker Co., 29 East Third street, Cincinnati, Ohio, will send circulars to anybody that may desire to know about the Machine. Anyone who is looking for something on which they can easily make a good salary should secure one of these machines, and see how easily they can be sold. Every farmer will buy one.

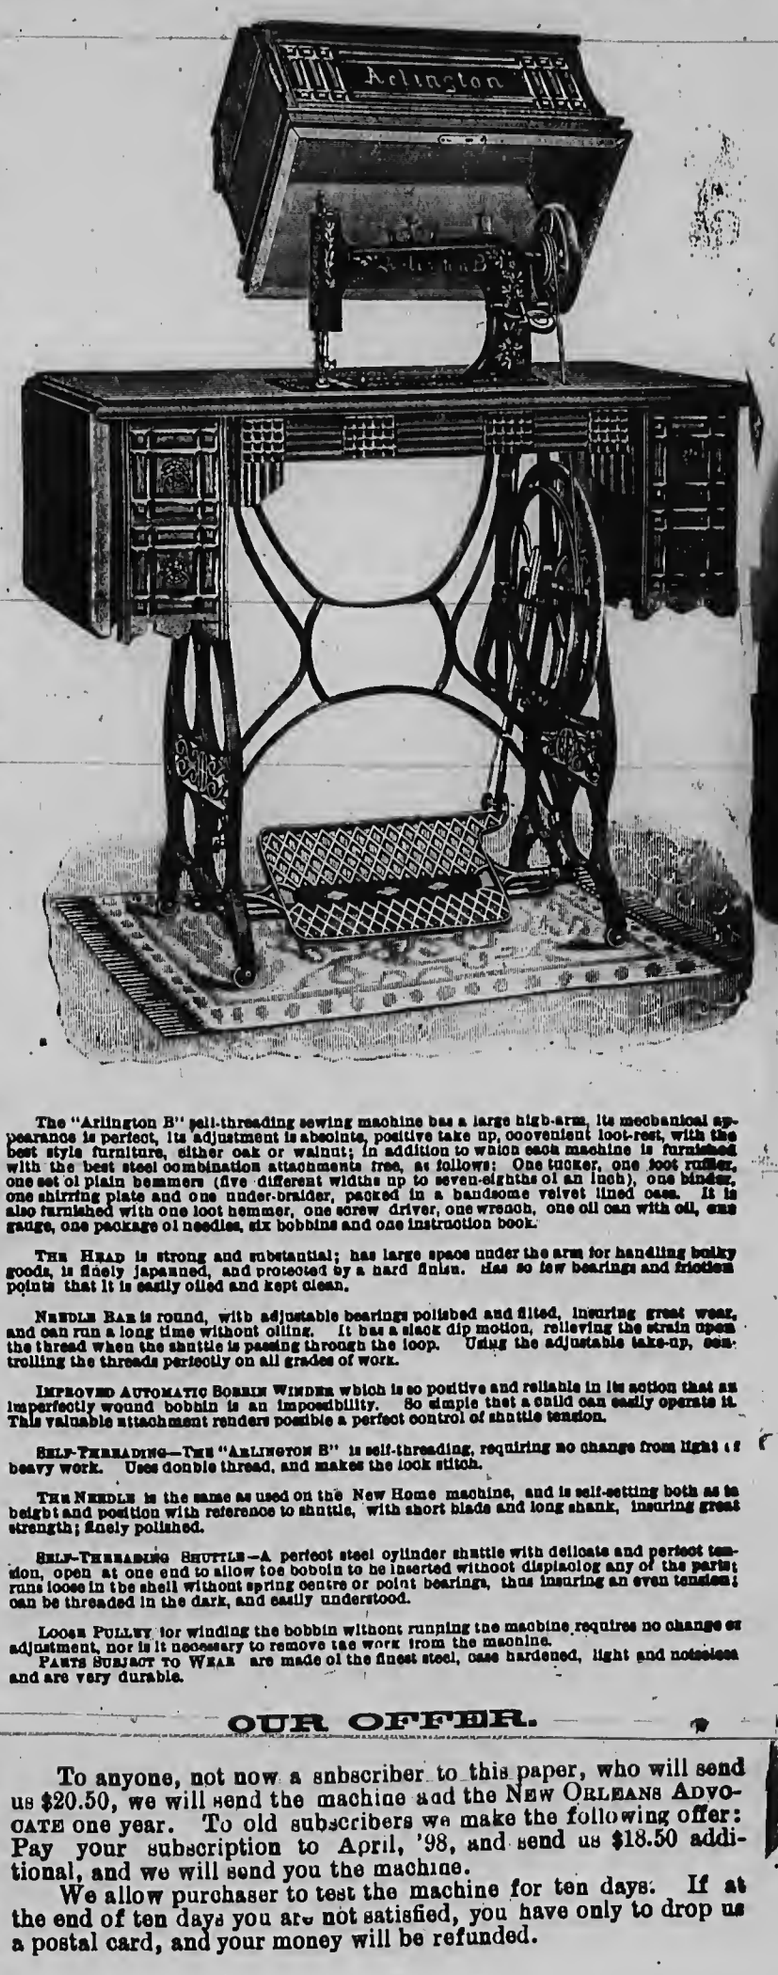
Our Machine Offer

New Improved High-Arm "Arlington B" Self-Threading Sewing Machine.

A recorded certificate of warranty for 10 years accompanies each machine. The "Arlington B" is complete in every detail, combining all modern and late improvements, such as automatic bobbin winder, self-threading shuttle, self-setting needle, upper spring tension, etc.



The "Arlington B" self-threading sewing machine has a large high-arm, its mechanical appearance is perfect, its adjustment is absolute, positive take up, convenient foot-rest, with the best style furniture, either oak or walnut; in addition to which each machine is furnished with the best steel combination attachments free, as follows: One tucker, one foot ruffler, one set of plain hemmers (five different widths up to seven-eighths of an inch), one binder, one shirring plate and one under-braider, packed in a handsome velvet lined case. It is also furnished with one foot hemmer, one screw driver, one wrench, one oil can with oil, one gauge, one package of needles, six bobbins and one instruction book.

THE HEAD is strong and substantial; has large space under the arm for handling bulky goods, is finely japanned, and protected by a hard finish. Has so few bearings and friction points that it is easily oiled and kept clean.

NEEDLE BAR is round, with adjustable bearings polished and fitted, insuring great wear, and can run a long time without oiling. It has a slack dip motion, relieving the strain upon the thread when the shuttle is passing through the loop. Using the adjustable take-up, controlling the threads perfectly on all grades of work.

IMPROVED AUTOMATIC BOBBIN WINDER which is so positive and reliable in its action that an imperfectly wound bobbin is an impossibility. So simple that a child can easily operate it. This valuable attachment renders possible a perfect control of shuttle tension.

SELF-THREADING—THE "ARLINGTON B" is self-threading, requiring no change from light to heavy work. Uses double thread, and makes the lock stitch.

THE NEEDLE is the same as used on the New Home machine, and is self-setting both as to height and position with reference to shuttle, with short blade and long shank, insuring great strength; finely polished.

SELF-THREADING SHUTTLE—A perfect steel cylinder shuttle with delicate and perfect tension, open at one end to allow the bobbin to be inserted without displacing any of the parts; runs loose in the shell without spring centre or point bearings, thus insuring an even tension; can be threaded in the dark, and easily understood.

LOOSE PULLEY for winding the bobbin without running the machine requires no change or adjustment, nor is it necessary to remove the work from the machine.

PARTS SUBJECT TO WEAR are made of the finest steel, case hardened, light and noiseless and are very durable.

OUR OFFER.

To anyone, not now a subscriber to this paper, who will send us $20.50, we will send the machine and the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE one year. To old subscribers we make the following offer: Pay your subscription to April, '98, and send us $18.50 additional, and we will send you the machine.

We allow purchaser to test the machine for ten days. If at the end of ten days you are not satisfied, you have only to drop us a postal card, and your money will be refunded.

TO AGENTS:

We will send this machine free to any preacher or other person who will send us twenty new subscribers with the cash—$40.

NO MATTER WHAT'S THE MATTER,

ONE OF THESE WILL DO YOU GOOD.

Rev. Frederic R. Marvin, long time pastor of the First Congregational Church, of Great Barrington, Mass., and at one time a practicing physician, a graduate of the College of Physicians and Surgeons, New York, says of Ripans Tabules: "The formula has long been in favor with medical men, and the method of preparation in the present form is modern and a great convenience. I always keep a vial of the Tabules upon my dressing table, and use them with confidence whenever occasion arises. For a disturbed condition of the digestive organs I know of nothing so good, and for an 'all-round' family remedy I do not believe there is anything better to be had."

HOME CIRCLE.

SOMEBODY'S DARLING.

BY MRS. M. R. LACOSTE.

Into a ward of the whitewashed walls,
Where the dead and dying lay,
Wounded by bayonets, shells, and balls,
Somebody's Darling was borne one day—
Somebody's Darling, so young and so brave,
Wearing yet on his pale, sweet face,
Soon to be hid by the dust of the grave,
The lingering light of his boyhood's grace.

Matted and damp are the curls of gold,
Kissing the snow of that fair young brow;
Pale are the lips of delicate mould—
Somebody's Darling is dying now.
Back from his beautiful blue-veined brow
Brush all the wandering waves of gold,
Cross his hands on his bosom now,
Somebody's Darling is still and cold.

Kiss him once for somebody's sake,
Murmur a prayer soft and low;
One bright curl from its fair mates take,
They were somebody's pride, you know:
Somebody's hand had rested there—
Was it a mother's soft and white?
And have the lips of a sister fair
Been baptized in those waves of light?

God knows best; he has somebody's love;
Somebody's heart enshrined him there;
Somebody waited his name above,
Night and morn on the wings of prayer.
Somebody wept when he marched away,
Looking so handsome, brave, and grand;
Somebody's kiss on his forehead lay,
Somebody clung to his parting hand.

Somebody's waiting and watching for him—
Yearning to hold him again to the heart;
And there he lies with his blue eyes dim,
And the smiling childlike lips apart.
Tenderly bury the fair young dead,
Pausing to drop on his grave a tear;
Carve on the wooden slab at his head—
"Somebody's Darling slumbers here."

One of Our Traits.

Have you ever thought of how very ungrateful we are toward the living, and how we hustle around to make amends for it after they are dead?

Among the prosperous farmers just over the border of an adjoining State was one noted for making things count. He had as good and faithful a wife as ever fell to the lot of a man, but he did not seem to have much time for her. She managed the household affairs splendidly, made the finest butter that went to the city market, and never allowed her family to want for home comforts. If she got the toothache, he allowed her to doctor it, and if she complained of the pain he said she was growling and showed by his manners that he was annoyed.

But if a sheep got the sniffs, or if a cow showed signs of hollow horn, or a pig became slightly scroffy, he would tear around at a great rate, sit up all night or rice post haste to town and buy very expensive medicines or bring the veterinary. He couldn't bear to see an animal suffer; besides if it died it was a dead loss.

Through neglect to consult a dentist this man's wife became sorely afflicted, but she kept on her feet for his sake as long as she could, then took to her bed and died.

That man took it awfully hard, wore crape, went moping aronnd for a year or more and put up a monument to her memory at a cost that would have covered the expense of providing her with needed help, medical attention or made life a comfort to her and a pleasnre to him.

How to Pay Rent.

One day a blacksmith was complaining to his iron merchant that such was the scarcity of money he could not possibly pay his rent. The merchant asked how much whisky or beer was nsed in his family in the course of a week, or even for one day. The blacksmith told him, whereupon the merchant took out pencil and paper and made a calculation, and showed the blacksmith that the cost of the drink amounted to considerably more in the year than his house rent. The calculation so astonished the blacksmith that he determined from that day neither to buy nor to drink intoxicating liquors of any kind. In the course of the year following he had not only paid his rent and the iron merchant, too, but had enough to spare for a new suit of clothes.—New York Witness.

Force of Habit.

It was a quaint and singularly wise remark, by a modern essayist, that no one's example is so dangerous to us as our own; for when we have done a certain thing once it is so much easier to do it again. It is the first step which counts in evil, as well as in good.

The tendency of human nature to form habits, to run in grooves, is one of its most marked characteristics. Fortunately for us, it has its good side as well as its bad side. If we can only too easily form a habit of petulance, of ill-temper, we can also, by trying, form a habit of self-control; and each fresh victory over ourselves is easier than the first. A habit of application is, it would be safe to say, of as much importance to almost any great man as is his genius. Not that any amount of application can make a dull man brilliant; but that without steady application a brilliant man might almost as well be dull, as far as anything that he is likely to accomplish is concerned. "Perseverance is genius," several great men have said, in lightly varying phrase, but this is not true. Perseverance is only the right hand of genius. Something is breathed into a man at his birth—a divine fire—which makes great things possible to him, while to his brother in the next cradle they would be impossible forever. But having received this divine fire, he must give it fuel. It is the sign that he must work more, and not less than his fellows; and so there is no one thing so remarkable in the history of our great men as their habits of prodigious application.—Exchange.

Good Companionship.

High and strong character is fostered by companionship with its kind. No one so much as the active business man needs the daily contact with whole and meditative minds quite apart from business life. He would gain by it better judgment for ordinary transactions, as well as greater serenity in the midst of the bustle and drive off the market. Such companionship is always available. A' Kempis, Bunyan, Flavel, and a score of men like them, may wait at his library table every morning and evening, ready to converse with him. They are as different from the men he meets during the day as the closet and cloister differ from the Stock Exchange. They would prove an alterative to his mind and a purifier of his heart. They would give him perspective, making his successes elate him less and his disappointments less depressing, but giving to all his possessions a truer value, and to many of them a higher value, than he has set on them heretofore. Only these men of high and holy thonght do not show their real selves to those who ask only a single sentence from their lips. They become companions to those who dwell at leisure on their words.—The Congregationalist.

Be Prompt.

Don't live a single hour in your life without doing exactly what is to be done in it, and going straight through it from beginning to end. Work, play, study—whatever it is, take hold at once, and finish it up squarely; then to the next thing, without letting any moments drop between.

It is wonderful to see how many hours these prompt people contrive to make of a day. It is as though they picked up the moments the dawdlers lost. And if you ever find yourself where you have so many things pressing upon you that you hardly know how to begin, let me tell you a secret: Take hold of the very one that comes to hand, and you will find the rest will all fall into line, and follow after like a company of well-drilled soldiers; and though work may be hard to meet when it charges in a squad, it is easily vanquished if you can bring it into line.

You may have seen the anecdote of the man who was asked how he had accomplished so much in his life. "My father taught me," was the reply, "when I had anything to do, to go and do it." There is the secret—the magic word, Now!—Lutheran.

W. C. Bryant and His Wife.

The mutual love of Bryant and his wife, Fanny Fairchild, produced one of the most ideal marriages that is recorded in the history of celebrated men. A devoted and very dear friend of them both says:

"The union between Mr. and Mrs. Bryant was a poem of the tenderest rhythm. Any of us who remember Mr. Byrant's voice when he said 'Frances' will join in his hope that she kept the same beloved name in heaven. I remember alluding to those exquisite lines, 'The Future Life,' to Mrs. Bryant, and her replying, 'Oh, my dear, I am always sorry for anyone who sees me after reading those lines; they must be so disappointed.'"

Bryant, at the death of his wife, said:

"I never wrote a poem that I did not repeat it to her, and take her judgment upon it. I found its success with the public to be precisely in proportion to the impression it made upon her."

She was the blessing and stay of his life for forty-five years, and he was her poet and lover at seventy as at seventeen.—Great Thoughts.

What to Do with a Bad Temper.

Starve it. Give it nothing to feed on. When something tempts you to grow angry do not yield to the temptation. It may for a minute or two be difficult to control yourself, but try it. Force yonrself to do nothing, to say nothing, and the rising temper will be obliged to go down because it has nothing to hold it up. The person who can and does control the tongue, hands, heart, in the face of provocation, is a hero.

What is gained by yielding to temper? For a minute there is a feeling of relief, but soon comes a sense of sorrow and shame, with a wish that the temper had been controlled. Friends are separated by a bad temper; tronble is caused by it, and pain given to others as well as to self.

That pain often lasts for days—even years, sometimes for life. An outburst of temper is like the bursting of a steam boiler, it is impossible to tell beforehand what will be the result. The evil done may never be remedied. Starve your temper. It is not worth keeping alive. Let it die.—Golden Censer.

Good Company.

Immanuel, God with us! Stay near to him. Some one is knocking timidly at the study door. "What do you want, little one?" "Nothing, papa; only to be with you." Be like the simple, loving child. Keep close to the Father. Believe that you may. "Are you alone?" said a wicked-looking man to a woman as she stepped from the East river ferry boat one evening. "No," she answered quickly, and hastened on. He followed. "I thought you were alone," he said. "I am not," she replied. "I don't see anyone." "The Lord Almighty and the angels are my companions. I am never alone." "You keep too good company for me," was his response as he hurried away. —Exchange.

Among the millions of readers of "Pilgrim's Progress," few in proportion have read that remarkable essay by Nathaniel Hawthorne on "The Celestial Railroad." Though comparatively brief, it is of a lofty and simple style which draws on the reader irresistibly to the conclusion. It is keen in its satire, yet gentle in expression as the most genial of Irving's pages. So closely is it connected with Bunyan's masterpiece that one may be said not to comprehend the latter till he has read the former. No adequate description of the essay could be given which would satisfy the reader. To such a refined spirit as that of Hawthorne the glaring hypocrisies of the religious world must have seemed as foul blots on a fair face. His weapon was not denunciation, but mild wit. This he felt called on to use, and he skillfully wielded it. No more effective religious essay could be put into the hands of one who needs to learn the real tendency of certain elements in modern religious life. It is found in "Mosses from an Old Manse."—Selected.

It is a vain thought for us to flee from the work which God hath appointed us for the sake of finding a greater blessing, instead of seeking it where alone it is to be found—in loving obedience.—George Eliot.

The future destiny of the child is the work of the mother.—Napoleon.

40 YEARS THE STANDARD.

During one of Mr. Earle's meetings, a wife confessed Christ and united with the church. Three or four years afward the evangelist came back to the same town, and on the day after his arrival he received a note from the husband of this woman, asking him to call and see him. He said to Mr. Earle: "When you came here three years ago I had no faith in your God, your Bible, or your heaven. Wife said she was converted, and I did not object to her joining the church, but I said, 'I will watch her now and see what comes of it.' I have sent for you to say that if I can get what wife has, I want it. She has proved to me since her conversion by her loving gentleness, tender sympathy, patience and kindness, that she has something which I have not." The result was the conversion of that husband. Without a word the wife had won him.

Wise words on the subject of the training of children to attend church services with regularity, are these from the Cumberland Presbyterian: "If there is a decline in the habit of church-going, one chief reason for it is that thousands of children have been allowed to grow up without forming and cultivating this habit. Some parents have the foolish notion, that it does a child no good to be compelled to attend church. They do not reason this way about attending school or about the learning of other wholesome habits. The boy who has an aversion to the daily washing of his face or combing of his hair is not allowed to exercise his preferences in these matters. He learns habits of neatness, habits of study, habits of industry, by being compelled to cultivate such habits. Why not in the same way teach him habits of reverence, of worship, of Sabbath observance and church-going?"

The talkative listen to no one, for they are ever speaking. And the first evil that attends those who know not to be silent is, that they hear nothing.

HYGIENE.

Fruit as Food and Medicine.

As a medicine, I look upon fruit as a most valuable ally. When the body is in that breaking-up condition known as scurvy, the whole medical profession look upon fruit and fresh vegetables as the one and only known remedy. I believe the day will come when science will use it very much more largely than it does now in the treatment of many of the every day ailments. Impure blood means gout, rheumatism, skin diseases, rickets, and other troubles. As it is proved that fruit will purify and improve the quality of the blood, it must follow that fruit is both food and medicine combined. In fevers I use grapes and strawberries, giving them to my patients in small, but frequent doses—oranges and baked apples, if the others are not obtainable. For rheumatism plenty of lemons are invaluable. White girls, with miserable, pallid complexions, want a quart of strawberries a day; where these are not obtainable, bananas, which contain much iron, are a good substitute. Probably, of all fruits, the apple stands unrivaled for general purposes, in the household; either raw or cooked it can be taken by nearly everybody, and it contains similar properties to the other more delicate fruits. To my mind the pear is more easily digested than the apple, and for eating uncooked is superior to it. Dried fruits should be used when green can not be obtained. If soaked for a few hours before cooking they make a capital substitute for fresh fruit and they come cheaper to the consumer. For preserving fruit I look upon bottling in glass bottles as the coming thing. Not by the use of chemicals, such as salicylic and boracic acids and the various preservatives made from them, but simply by protecting it after cooking from the fermentative germs in the atmosphere. It keeps for years, turns out even more palatable than green fruit, is equally digestible and contains all the virtues of fresh-cooked fruit. Canned fruit is not so good; the acid of the fruit dissolves up tin and lead from the tin, and I have seen very serious cases of illness as a result. Besides, fruit should be sold much cheaper in bottles than in tins, as the bottle can be returned and used again.—Popular Science Monthly.

A THOUGHT THAT KILLED A MAN!

He thought that he could trifle with disease. He was run down in health, felt tired and worn out, complained of dizziness, biliousness, backaches and headaches. His liver and kidneys were out of order. He thought to get well by dosing himself with cheap remedies. And then came the ending. He fell a victim to Bright's disease! The money he ought to have invested in a safe, reliable remedy went for a tombstone.

Warner's Safe Cure

is the only standard remedy in the world for kidney and liver complaints. It is the only remedy which physicians universally prescribe. It is the only remedy that is backed by the testimony of thousands whom it has relieved and cured.

THERE IS NOTHING ELSE THAT CAN TAKE ITS PLACE

In Memoriam.

COL. O. J. MOORE.

My first acquaintance with Col. Osburn Jones Moore began in the early part of the year 1866. I was then presiding elder of the Starkville district, Mississippi Conference. He was then recording steward of the Winona circuit, and was secretary of the Quarterly Conference. After this we were close friends until the day of his death. I am not writing his obituary, as I suppose other hands will do this; but what I may here say is a volunteer tribute to my old friend and brother in Christ. Take Bro. Moore in all the departments of life, he was no common man. Having large business capacity, he succeeded in amassing a competency of this world's goods; but in all this success he never neglected a duty to the church which he considered incumbent upon him, and it is in church relations I desire to speak most particularly.

Bro. Moore was an old landmark of Methodism in Mississippi. He was a member of the Methodist Church, South, in Virginia before he moved to Mississippi. He was received into her communion by the venerable John Early (afterwards Bishop), who was then presiding elder of the district in which Bro. Moore lived. During his membership in Virginia he had for his pastors, from time to time, such men as Lewis Skidmore, Hezekiah G. Leigh, and Henry B. Cowls. He moved to Mississippi some time in 1844, I believe. At any rate, in the year 1845, at a Quarterly Conference held in Greenwood (at which he was not present), he was elected a steward, and also elected recording steward at the same time. He held these offices continuously until 1894; therefore, he was recording steward forty-nine years. At his own urgent solicitation his brethren of the Quarterly Conference relieved him from the active duties of the stewardship, and in all these long years of official duties he never missed but one Quarterly Conference, if not at the time absent from the State.

Bro. Moore not only served the church as steward, but he was, from time to time, superintendent of Sunday-schools, and was often elected a delegate to the Annual Conference, and four times elected a delegate to the General Conference. In all these relations Bro. Moore stood among the foremost of the lay delegation. Being a man of sound mind, good judgment, and thoroughly conversant with Methodist law and doctrine, his advice was of great importance in her deliberative bodies.

There are very few of Bro. Moore's early comrades in church work now living, either preachers or laymen. Let us consider the presiding elders under whom Bro. Moore served for fifty-one years: John Lane, Lovel Campbell, Levi Pearce, James Walton, Green M. Rogers, J. M. Pugh, Wm. Wadworth, Geo. D. Wade, J. G. Carlisle, K. A. Jones (three terms), F. M. Featherstun, W. P. Barton, J. W. Knott, T. Y. Ramsey, R. P. Mitchell, J. J. Wheat, S. M. Thames, and J. B. Stone (the present incumbent). All of these have passed over the river to the glory land save three: Jones, Thames, and Stone. When we consider the lapse of time from the first of these to the present incumbent, we can more fully realize how long Bro. Moore worked for the church he was so devoted to. Many officials who labored with him in the Master's vineyard have passed on before.

Yes, Bro. Moore was a Methodist from principle. He loved the doctrines and usages of the Methodist Church, and was ever ready and willing to labor for her good. Not simply because he was a Methodist did he work for the upbuilding of the church, but more because he was a true Christian, and desired, above all things else, the prosperity of the cause of God.

Bro. Moore may not have done everything as we would have done it; but, having known him intimately for thirty years, and being intimately associated with him in church work for twelve years as his presiding elder, we believe we are safe in saying no truer or more devoted man to the church ever served in her official capacities. I can not here, nor is it necessary for me to recount the many charities bestowed (on the Bible plan of not your left hand knowing what your right hand doeth) by this noble man. He served his own generation, and outlived most of them, and did much to advance the cause of Christ, and his work abides. The long warfare is over, the victory gained, and toils are over, strifes of earth are ended, and so, we trust, he is ever with his Lord.

K. A. JONES.

OBITUARIES.

STUART—DR. CHARLES STUART died at his residence near Barton, Miss., Sept. 25, 1896, in his eighty-first year. He professed faith in Christ and joined the M. E. Church, South, in 1887, remaining a member of that church until called away to join the church triumphant.

During his seven weeks' severe and painful affliction, it is said, not a murmur escaped his lips. In humble trust he waited patiently for the summons which he was assured would soon come. Faithfulness and strength of purpose were leading characteristics of the man, and which virtues he tried to impress upon his children and all whom he had to do with; was loved most by those who knew him best. Of a family of nine children, five are left to mourn a father's absence, but who rejoice in the thought of his glorification. Our last talk with Bro. Stuart was about heaven and the glorified ones there.

May God bless his sons and daughters in this, their bereavement, in that by it they shall be drawn nearer Christ!

BEN P. JACO, P. C.

CUBLEY—Mrs. MARY R. CUBLEY was born March 4, 1820, in Marengo county, Ala., and died at her home in Stonewall, Miss., Oct. 6, 1896.

Sister Cubley joined the Presbyterian Church in early life, and remained in its communion until 1852, at which time she attached herself to the M. E. Church, South, where she lived a consistent Christian until the day of her death. She was an affectionate and devoted mother, and a warm friend to all who knew her. She died in the faith.

A few days before she died she said to her pastor, "I am ready to go, or willing to stay."

She leaves three sons, one daughter, and a large circle of friends to mourn her loss. We tender to them our sympathy, and pray God's sustaining grace on them in this hour of grief.

J. T. LEGGATT.

Enterprise, Miss.

ROSS—W. M. Ross was born in Weakley county, Tenn., Oct. 16, 1844; married to Sallie E. Cottrell, Feb. 19, 1870; departed this life July 20, 1896.

Bro. Ross professed faith in Christ, September, 1893; joined the M. E. Church, South, of which he lived and died a member. He was liberal, always ready to contribute of his means to the cause of Christ.

He was a good husband, tender and loving father. His wife and four children are left to mourn his absence. May the Holy Comforter keep and cheer their hearts in such times of sorrow!

Catarrh Can Not Be Cured

with LOCAL APPLICATIONS, as they can not reach the seat of the disease. Catarrh is a blood or constitutional disease, and in order to cure it you must take internal remedies. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, and acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces. Hall's Catarrh Cure is not a quack medicine. It was prescribed by one of the best physicians in this country for years, and is a regular prescription. It is composed of the best tonics known, combined with the best blood purifiers, acting directly on the mucous surfaces. The perfect combination of the two ingredients is what produces such wonderful results in curing Catarrh. Send for testimonials, free.

Hall's Family Pills are the best.

The Mid-Continent thus retouches an important distinction. "Thus far the present phase of higher criticism has for the most part been only negative. Will until it attempts something constructive it you would see its futility. It promises large results, but results of an affirmative kind, and which represent a unity among the critics, will be few, and are yet a great way off. As an observing colored brother in a city mission church, complaining of his Ethiopian pastor that he did not expound the Word, said: 'He can take the Bible apart as good as any man I ever seen, but he can't put it together again.' Thus destructive criticism is one thing, and not a difficult thing, either, to make; but building up an affirmative and satisfactory system of belief is quite another thing."

HOLLY SPRINGS FEMALE COLLEGE.
The Epworth College
(Formerly MALONE)

Is located in Holly Springs, which is situated at the intersection of the Illinois Central and Kansas City, Memphis and Birmingham railroads, into which ten passenger trains come and go every day.

Holly Springs is the highest point in the State of Mississippi, according to the geological survey, and the highest point on the railroad between New Orleans and Chicago; hence it is noted for its healthfulness. The success of the college for the last five years has been unprecedented under the circumstances. We expect still greater success under my successors, S. A. SEAL and Rev. R. W. STANDIFER, who will make such improvements as time and experience may suggest. I shall remain in the college as business manager until December, and will take great pleasure in giving to the patrons of the college any information they may desire.

I call special attention to our very reasonable terms.

Something Good in Dixie

Please understand I am a woman of Indiana, not of Dixie, but do appreciate this good; delight to ack lowledge it that all persons afflicted as I have been may know there is hope and happiness for them. I and been a stammerer from childhood; sometimes so, unable to speak as though dumb. Had tried several cures, but all of them failed. Then, as a last resort, I tried Rev. R. W. Randolph's Cure for Stuttering or Stammering, and now am CURED. Four days after complying with the requirements of this place, I received by mail that which caused me to talk with such ease and unlimited satisfaction, which, to one who endures the affliction as long and severely as I have, is a "veritable gladness in the soul." I have never seen Rev. Randolph, but have found him to be a man of his word, and is highly recommended in church circles, also by State officials. His Voice School, or Institute, is located at No. 485 Poplar street, Memphis, Tenn., and to persons going to this school a cure is GUARANTEED. The Cure by mail gives the same happy results, if instructions are carefully followed, which even children can do, and those needing the benefit of this GOOD will find him so considerate in his terms they need not suffer these afflictions longer. Sympathetic for the sake of the unfortunate.

The Holman Self-Pronouncing S. S. Teachers' Bible

Divinity Circuit, Round Corners, etc.

CONTAINS THE FOLLOWING HELPS TO THE STUDY OF THE BIBLE.

Concordance, with Contexts, over 40,000 References; Index to Persons, Places and Subjects, 16,000 References; Scripture Atlas, with Index; Glossary of Bible Words; Bible Calendar; Summary and Analyses of the Old and New Testaments.

A Self-Pronouncing Dictionary of Proper Names and Foreign Words contained in the Bible, comprising about 3,500 words, giving the pronunciation, the meaning, and the location of the text where the word occurs for the first time.

Exhaustive Articles on Biblical History, Geography, Topography, Natural History, Ethnology, Botany, Chronology, Music and Poetry; a Complete Harmony of the Gospels, Tables of Parables, Miracles, Prophecies, Prayers, Money, Weights and Measures, Jewish Sects and Orders, etc.

TWELVE FULL-PAGE MAPS IN COLORS.

Every proper name in the text is syllabified and accented, and has the vowels marked according to the most authoritative modern standards of pronunciation. The text is in exact conformity with that of the world-famous Oxford S. S. Teacher's Bible. All the valuable "Helps to the Study of the Bible" contained in the Oxford Bible are retained.

The only Teacher's Bible with a self-pronouncing text. No similar Bible was ever obtainable heretofore; in fact, no publishers ever attempted its publication.

"The essence of fifty expensive volumes, by men of sacred learning, is condensed in these 'Helps.'"

The large-type (Bourgeois) edition sells to persons who are not subscribers for $5. Our subscribers get it, on conditions specified below, for $2.35. The same Bible in Minion type, which is somewhat smaller than Bourgeois, we offer to our subscribers, on conditions named below, for $1.55. To those who are not subscribers we sell it at $3.15. We also handle an edition in still smaller type (Emerald). Our subscribers get this for $1.15.

In order to get anyone of these at these rates it is necessary to pay your subscription one year in advance, viz., to November, '97. (A little later it will be December, '97.)

For twenty cents we will have your name engraved in gilt letters on the outside of the book.

According to Russian and French papers, the buildings recently erected in connection with the great fair at Nijni-Novgorod are to be acquired by a French syndicate, with the object of creating a permanent exhibition of French goods in Russia.

The Emperor of Russia, says the Westminster Gazette, offered the Order of St. Andrew to Lord Salisbury during his visit to Balmoral, but it was declined in accordance with the rule which forbids a British minister to accept any foreign decoration.

In order to keep up the spirits of his Swiss guard, the last remnant of the Swiss mercenaries once so common throughout Europe, Pope Leo XIII. has permitted a small theatre to be constructed in the Belvidere garden of the Vatican. Plays and concerts will be given in it this Winter.

The announcement that Li Hung Chang has been appointed Foreign Minister of the Chinese Empire is a change in the governmental system of China which is worthy of more than passing notice. Hitherto the foreign relations of the Flowery Kingdom have been entirely in the hands of a council known as the Tsung-li-yamen, which is composed of the Emperor's entourage, and has always been noted for its incapacity and narrow-minded exclusiveness.

Indigestion and Dyspepsia.

"I received the Rainy Day Puzzle which was sent for three trade-marks from Hood's Sarsaparilla and eight cents in stamps, and the children are delighted with it, and it is also very entertaining for old people. I have taken about three bottles of Hood's Sarsaparilla for indigestion, with which I suffered for years, and I have been greatly benefited. I can testify to the fact that Hood's Sarsaparilla deserves all the praise that it receives. I regard it as the best medicine on earth for indigestion and dyspepsia, and all troubles arising from impure blood."—James M. Turnley, West Monroe, La.

Net Poetry.

The writer has been a steward at a small out-post for several years. A duty of no small moment is to look to preachor's temporal comfort. Fortunately collections have usually been satisfactory. Three years ago our pastor had a large family to provide for, and, although our paymonts were about up, a brother suggested that a suit of clothes would not be amiss, suiting the remark with a liberal subscription. The list was handed around, and very soon enough was obtained for a suit and overcoat. The pastor was requested to select his choice from a fine list of samples—that done, measures were taken. In a few days he received the present so easily and cheerfully gotten up, and, of course, all concerned were pleased. This may be a hint for others in like situation to imitate, and now just before Conference is the time. "He tempers the wind," etc. A STEWARD.

From Bro. Newsom.

I write this to say that I am now convalescing from one of the most painful attacks of sickness since the days of yellow fever with me long ago. I think I was not dangerously ill, but certainly stood a ready chance to become so. I do not see how I could more fully realize a sensible presence of the sympathy of the brethren. I write this to thank them for that sympathy and their prayers. When conversing with no one for hours there was a seeming prosence of the brethren in the ministry. Old-time religious associations and old-time hymns and songs, expressive of the love of God and grace of the Lord Jesus Christ, came trooping through my mind, especially one old song which, perhaps, I had not heard sung for fifty years came thrilling through memory, until every word came to me with the old tune, bringing all the thrilling effect which filled my soul with the singing of the long ago. J. D. NEWSON.

CHILLIFUGE is a superb appetizer, and is highly valuable for weak and sickly children, as well as the aged and feeble.

From Rev. H. J. Harris.

Because of my own physical disability and my wife's feeble health I have been granted a supernumerate relation. We can go no further in active work. We have neither horse nor carriage, nor "one foot of land," nor "cottage in this wilderness." It is more than 50 years we have been going in and out before the Lord, and sounding the trumpet of the gospel, until now we have attained to our threescore and ten. We have tried to sow in tears that we may reap in joy. "We beg the prayers of those we love."

THE PRESENT SITUATION.

It has been predicted that no republican form of government could stand. The subjects of such governments become dissatisfied for some cause, whether real or imaginary.

To-day throughout the civilized world there are omens of coming evil. The predictions of men for years gone by are being verified, unless God orders it otherwise, for which every child of God should pray. Perilous times indeed are upon us now. I have held my peace nor ventured to speak of the state of things, politically. We have never had such strife as the present. If ever there was a time for prayer and fasting, it is upon us now. St. Paul teaches to pray for kings, princess, rulers—all that are in authority—that we may do so that we may live in all quietness and in godlines and honesty.

If there was ever a nation that robbed God, the American people have done this in tithes and offerings. Vice and crime of every kind are steadily on the increase. Let us pray for divine guidance.

H. J. HARRIS.

The trial of Mr. and Mrs. Castle, the Americans accused of shoplifting in London, took place last week. The prosecution abandoned the case against Mr. Castle, there being no evidence against him; but Mrs. Castle having pleaded guilty to the charges, was sentenced to three months' imprisonment, without hard labor.

CHRIST'S TESTIMONIES.

SUNDAY, NOV. 15—TO THE HOLY SPIRIT.

(John xiv, 16, 26; xvi, 7, 13.)

In Christ's words of comfort, spoken to his disciples a short time before his death (John xiv, 16), he has a great deal to say about the coming of the Holy Spirit, whom four times he calls "The Comforter," or "The Advocate," and three times the "Spirit of Truth." In one place he is promised to the disciples as the gift of the Father, through the Son's intercession; in another place he is promised to be sent from the Father in the Son's name; and in still another place Christ himself promises to send the Holy Spirit to them from the Father.

In every case, he is promised as a distinct personal agent, with certain gracious offices to perform, and his coming is conditioned upon the going away of Christ.

(1) He comes as an abiding presence in the hearts of Christ's disciples. The eleven were very sad at the prospect of Christ's departure, but Christ assures them that a spiritual presence is better than a bodily presence; that he himself will be ever present with them through the Holy Spirit. With Christ absent from the world in a bodily form, and with the Spirit of Christ present, a living faith is possible that secures all the benefits of Christ's presence that would be ours if he had not ascended, and benefits that otherwise would have been impossible. "Whom not having seen, ye love; in whom, though now ye see him not, yet believing, ye rejoice with joy unspeakable, and full of glory; receiving the end of your faith, even the salvation of your souls." (I. Peter i, 8, 9.)

(2) He comes as the imparter of truth. He convinces the sinful heart of its need of Christ, and he plants within the repenting and believing heart the seeds of saving truth, that bring forth a spiritual fruitage. He teaches Christ's disciples, reminding them of the words of Christ, and throwing light upon their inmost meaning.

A Union League rally was held at Felicity Street Church, Friday, Oct. 30. An excellent program was rendered, but the attendance was not what it ought to have been.

The following Leagues have subscribed definite amounts up to this date for the support of a foreign missionary, as agreed upon at the last State Conference: Covington, $5; Dryades Street, $15; Crowley, $20; Jackson Street, Lake Charles, $15; Parker Chapel, $5; Washington, $5; Alexandria, $10; Shreveport, $152; Carondelet Street, $20; Franklin, $5; Algiers, $5. Total, $257. Let us hear from others.

"The Angels of the Churches."

Will you please give space in your valuable columns for me to place before your readers my unqualified indorsement of an article appearing in the Nashville Christian Advocate, of Oct. 29 (1896), on page 3, entitled "The Angels of the Churches," written by Rev. Walker Lewis, D. D. Bro. Lewis has set before the readers of the Nashville in clearest light a matter that ought to commend itself to every son and daughter of our beloved Methodism.

I would like to be one of twenty or more who will bear their part of the expense of publishing ten thousand copies in pamphlet form for gratuitous distribution in our Conference. The thoughtless habit of discounting pasters has become so prevalent in our church that I feel sure that many pastors' influence and social qualities have been injured by it.

Now, brethren, if Bro. Lewis will agree to the above proposition, and you will come forward, the enterprise is ours; or if he (Bro. Lewis) will have them published himself, I will purchase five hundred at once.

I wish to say with reference to our charge (Centerville charge) that it is much better than it promised to be three months ago. Finances are better; members have increased.

The new torpedo boat "Destroyer," recently built at Birkenhead, England, for the Chilian government is credited with being the "fastest vessel afloat." On her trial trip, about two weeks ago, she made an average speed of 31 8 knots, which is equal to 36 6 miles.

MY DAYS AMONG THE DEAD.

BY ROBERT SOUTHEY.

My days among the dead are passed;
Around me I behold,
Where'er these casual eyes are cast,
The mighty minds of old:
My never-failing friends are they,
With whom I converse day by day.

With them I take delight in weal,
And seek relief in woe;
And while I understand and feel
How much to them I owe,
My cheeks have often been bedewed
With tears of thoughtful gratitude.

My thoughts are with the dead; with them
I live in long-past years;
Their virtues love, their faults condemn,
Partake their hopes and fears,
And from their lessons seek and find
Instruction with an humble mind.

My hopes are with the dead; anon
My place with them will be,
And I with them shall travel on
Through all futurity;
Yet leaving here a name, I trust,
That will not perish in the dust.

Communications.

Letter from Tennessee.

MR. EDITOR: In the beautiful Jackson Square, New Orleans, which has possessed such a fascination for me ever since I read Mr. Cable's "Grandissimes," the best of his Creole stories, stands the equestrian figure of the man who, perhaps, more than any other, is accepted by the world at large as the typical American, Andrew Jackson—"Old Hickory," as he is fondly called by the people of Tennessee. In front of the white-stone Capitol of this great State stands a facsimile of the New Orleans equestrian figure, executed by the same hand—that of Clark Mills, the famous sculptor. It is impossible to describe the almost worshipful devotion which the people of this State feel for the memory of Andrew Jackson. In nearly every town in the State some business interest is known as the "Old Hickory." The young men have political clubs called the "Old Hickory," and social clubs known as the "Hermitage," while "Old Hickory" brands of tobacco, grades of cloth and articles of clothing are set forth as the best way to tempt the patriotic purchaser. When we consider that the people of Mississippi at one time in their territorial history might have been exterminated but for the timely intervention of the stern old Indian fighter; when we remember that numbers of Mississippians pressed close behind him at the memorable siege of New Orleans, and that their proud capital city bears his name, we can easily understand the feelings with which he is regarded in his own State. Mr. Phelan, in his popular little work, "The School History of Tennessee," seeks to impress one fact upon the minds of his readers—a fact, too, which they are willing to accept as gospel truth, viz.: that Tennessee, during the administration of Andrew Jackson as President of the United States, fought the national battles, dictated the national policy, and directed the national finance. Having made this remarkable statement, he proceeds to prove it by citations from history which I believe have never been denied.

Tennesseeans, during this centennial year, point with pride to the fact that there sleep within her borders the bodies of three Presidents, each of whom served the nation during a time of extreme peril. Under a classic Grecian temple of beautiful white marble, on a sunny slope of Capitol Hill, Nashville, lie the remains of James K. Polk, the man who defeated the nation's idol, Henry Clay, for the Presidency, and who accepted bravely the ordeal of a war with Mexico, when men of seemingly greater strength shrank from it as involving too great responsibilities. On the summit of a lofty plateau among the mountains of East Tennessee sleeps all that is mortal of Andrew Johnson, the "Great Commoner" of the South. A towering marble shaft marks his last resting-place, and near by is the humble little log-house in which he began his stormy career, and over the door of which still swings the rude sign, "A. Johnson, Tailor." The portraits of these three men hang in close proximity on the walls of the State Library in the Capitol Building at Nashville. That of Jackson represents the conquering hero just after the battle of New Orleans, his gaze seeming to comprehend the whole earth in its sweep; that of Polk, delicate of feature, patrician in cast, a diplomat, a statesman perhaps, but not a soldier—the type idolized by the Old South; Andrew Johnson, stern of feature, a man of blood and iron, one who could crucify his own soul—as he did his own people—to carry out his convictions of right, or the biddings of his own imperious will. His eagle eye looks into the future without quailing, and seems to be defying still the menaces of the lordly Stanton, or, who knows? the whisperings of his own conscience as the memory of Mrs. Surratt obtrudes itself. Of the three, however, the memory of Andrew Jackson is paramount, and that of the other two sink into comparative insignificance beside it. Only twelve miles from Nashville, accessible by rail or by a beautiful turnpike road, stands the "Hermitage," the country home of the seventh President of the United States. Visitors from every portion of the United States flock to the old grey stone mansion as to a Mecca, and there is something fine in the severe simplicity of the place, corresponding well with the character of the man who loved it as a retreat from the cares and anxieties of statecraft and public turmoil. All the world knows the story of Andrew Jackson and his wife, the beautiful Rachel Hobart, who, legend tells, died of a broken heart because of the persistent teeth of slander attacking her fair fame. As lovely Rachel Donelson, she had attracted the attention of Hobart, a handsome, graceless, dissipated man, who treated her so cruelly that she was compelled to seek the protection of the courts by asking for a divorce. Her beauty, innocence and distress won the heart of Andrew Jackson, then a rising young lawyer, who boarded at the house of Mrs. Hobart's father. After the usual legal proceedings in such cases, Jackson, thinking the divorce had been granted according to the laws of Tennessee, married the beautiful and injured woman whose portrait graces the dim old parlors of the Hermitage. As Jacob loved his Rachel, so that years of service for her seemed as naught, so Jackson loved the woman who had first been enshrined in his heart. Owing to the many enemies which his strong personality and prominence in public life had made him, the character of Jackson's relations with Mrs. Hobart before his marriage to her, and the legality of that marriage, were attacked with great virulence, and the proud spirit of the grim old hero received a wound from which it never recovered.

As I have said, visitors from all over the world flock hither, and there is something fine in the severe simplicity of the place, corresponding, as it does, to the character of its former owner. The place is in the hands of the "Hermitage Association," an organization comprising some of the foremost women of the State of Tennessee, and is kept open for the inspection of visitors. Many interesting relics are found here, and the very spirit of "Old Hickory" seems to brood about the place. His bedroom, with its quaint old-fashioned furniture, is shown; the very bed on which he died, standing in the position it then occupied, though the big-flowered chintz bed-curtains have to be protected by glass doors to preserve them from the insatiate relic-hunter. A beautiful white-and-gold chair, of the style of the days of the French Empire, is also preserved under a glass case in the Hermitage drawing-room, a card attached telling that it was presented to General Jackson by a member of the Lafayette family. A curiously constructed mantelpiece, composed of the native woods of Louisiana and Mississippi, is shown in the dining-room. It was made and presented to Jackson by the citizens of the above-mentioned States in token of their recognition of his services at the battle of New Orleans. A large section of it has been stolen away, and to prevent its being destroyed entirely, the Hermitage Association has covered it with a gauze-wire screen. By far the most interesting relic of the Hermitage, however, is the old negro who is the presiding genius of the place, Uncle Alfred, who was Jackson's body-servant, slave, and confidential friend. He may be considered as the ideal of that type of negro so fast disappearing—the trusty family servants of the Old South. Uncle Alfred is garrulous with age and self-importance, and professes to be able, at a glance, to tell a "born gen'leman or lady from po' white trash." According to his story, "Me and the gin'ral" fought all the important battles usually accredited to the latter, and General Jackson himself could not be more jealous of the family reputation than this faithful old negro. He can neither read nor write, but he can repeat accurately the inscriptions on the graves of President and Mrs. Jackson, and nothing angers him more than the intentional or accidental omission of a portion of the epitaph by visitors. He was an eye-witness of the famous duel between Jackson and Dickinson, and declares that mode of settling difficulties far superior to that of the present day, when "men slip their hands back into their coat-tail pockets" and shoot their opponents when they "are not lookin'." An attempt to steal the body of Jackson from the grave in the Hermitage garden was made about two years ago, much to the alarm of Uncle Alfred, who stood guard over the sacred spot for many nights afterward. The crime was reported to the Hermitage Association, and every means used to discover the perpetrators of the daring scheme, but without success. Very recently an Italian, dying in New York, confessed to having made the attempt, instigated thereto by the hope of securing a large reward from a man who had a mania for securing the skeletons of famous people. One can almost fancy the bones of "Old Hickory" rising in revolt at the thought of such an indignity. Doubtless, during the Centennial Exhibition the number of visitors to the "Hermitage" will be largely increased.

Main Street M. E. Church, South, Water Valley, Miss.

THE ONLY "SECOND" CHURCH IN THE NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE—REV. THOMAS B. CLIFFORD, PASTOR.

The buildings, as shown in cut above, are situated just west of the City Park, on North Main street, and in centre of a rapidly growing portion of the city. Lots have been graded and terraced, church and parsonage buildings erected and furnished since last Spring. The church was commenced in April, 1896, under direction of the Building Committee, consisting of Jno. M. Taylor, Esq.; Hon. I. T. Blount, and T. B. Clifford. The church and parsonage were each built by J. W. Goodwin, builder and contractor, Water Valley, Miss.

The church was opened for public worship Sunday, June 14, 1896, with appropriate services conducted by Rev. J. S. Oakley, Holly Springs, and Rev. J. M. Wyatt, Ripley, Miss. During the week following a gracious revival was conducted by Rev. Inman W. Cooper, D. D., of Hazlehurst, Miss.

The church membership numbers eighty, with eighty-five on roll in Sunday-school; an Epworth League with twenty-six members, and a Woman's Parsonage and Home Mission Society with thirty members. The church building is lighted by electricity. On either side the rostrum and choir stand are rooms arranged for infant class and pastor's study.

An expensive silver communion service, together with a handsome pulpit Bible and hymn book, have been presented by a Christian lady in Water Valley.

This new and promising outerprise was projected by the Board of Missions of the North Mississippi Conference at the instance of the former presiding elder of the district, Rev. R. A. Burroughs. Thus Methodism moves forward in our towns and cities, occupying every available position whereby she may lift humanity up into the light of millennial glory.

Selections.

Rev. H. C. Morrison's Case.

Heretofore we have refrained from any mention of the charges against Rev. H. C. Morrison, one of the editors of The Methodist, Louisville, Ky.; but, as there are numerous inquiries in relation to the case, we deem it proper at this time to state exact facts as they have been given to the public.

The trouble was at Dublin, Texas, and, as the editor of the Baltimore Christian Advocate obtained the facts by personal correspondence, we quote from that paper:

"Desiring to get at the facts in the case, we addressed a letter to Rev. W. H. Matthews, the pastor of Dublin charge, making inquiry as to the action taken. Bro. Matthews replied, saying that when it was known that Bro. Morrison was coming into the bounds of his charge to hold a meeting, Rev. E. A. Smith, the presiding elder of the district, and the pastor wrote to Bro. Morrison, earnestly requesting him not to come. He replied that he would come. They wrote him again, saying that if he came, they would test the law as to whether he had a right under the Discipline of the church to come into another preacher's charge and hold a meeting over his protest. The Official Board of our church in Dublin also wrote to Bro. Morrison, asking him not to come. He came, nevertheless. The presiding elder and the preacher in charge waited on him and requested him to discontinue the meeting. He refused to do so. They called on him again in company with other brethren. He refused to hear them. The preacher in charge then appointed a committee of local preachers to investigate the case. The committee decided that a trial was necessary, and presented a bill of charges and specifications. Bro. Morrison was notified of this action. The charges and specifications, with evidence, were sent to Bro. Morrison's own Quarterly Conference in Kentucky.

"So it seems that the action of the brethren in Dublin was not illegal nor irregular. They investigated the case, formulated a bill of charges, prepared the testimony, and sent the same to the Quarterly Conference to which Bro. Morrison is amenable; all of which, in our judgment, they had a perfect right to do."

Touching this and all similar cases, there is but one question involved: Have the presiding elder, preacher in charge, and the Official Board of a pastorate the absolute right to determine and control the religious services by our preachers within such bounds?

To answer in the negative and say they have not, and that a Methodist preacher has the right to go into a brother's territory against his will and protest, and conduct services, is to place the church at the mercy of freebooters, produce anarchy, and result in destruction.

To answer affirmatively, as we do, and say that the presiding elder, preacher in charge, and Official Board have supreme control of all Methodist services in the pastorate, and are to be the sole judges of who shall and who shall not conduct services, accords with both law and reason, and is essential to church order and life. For such services they are responsible to the Annual Conference, and a failure upon their part to protect the church against raving ecclesiastics would subject them to censure by that body.

We believe every loyal Methodist in the land will endorse this view of the case. To fair-minded men, who love the church, there can be no two opinions here.—Central Methodist.

Be True.

Religion, or the amount of it possessed by most people, does not in all cases make them honorable. The fact that they have made a promise to do certain things weighs very little with them. It seems to them of no particular consequence whether they break it or keep it, whether duties are performed or neglected. If amid the many societies there could be one which would impress upon the minds of youth the paramount necessity of being faithful to obligations, we would do our best to make that one popular. But so far as we are informed, the members of the societies are, for the most part, as indifferent to the vows or pledges exacted of them as they are to those made at the altar of the church. It is only the few that are true. A parent can do no better work for his child than to make him feel that when his word has been passed it must be adhered to, not merely when it is convenient, but when it is possible. There is no surer test of a gentleman—that is, of the highest type of manhood—than this.—Zion's Herald.

The One Thing.

Richard Cecil called on a celebrated physician for medical advice. On returning home he told his wife, with glowing enthusiasm, of the accomplishments of the physician, the extent and variety of his information, the fascination of his manners, and the charm of his conversation, declaring that he had never spent a more delightful hour than the one in the doctor's office. "And what remedy did he prescribe for your disease?" inquired Mrs. Cecil. "I declare, I've entirely forgotten what he did recommend," replied the good minister after a moment's hesitation. He often used this incident with great effect in addressing young ministers: "I charge you, whatever of argument, or rhetoric, or illustration, you may employ, that you fail not to make your hearers remember the remedy for sin—Christ and his atonement."—United Presbyterian.

The statistics of every State show a greater amount of crime and misery attributable to the use of ardent spirits obtained at these liquor saloons than to any other source.—Supreme Court of the United States.

The thing that hurts the devil is not so much our profession as our practice.

DON'T BLAME THE WORLD.

Don't blame the world because the thorns
Are found among the roses;
The day that breaks in storm may be
All sunshine when it closes.

We can not always hope to meet
With fortune's fond caressing;
And that which seems most hard to bear
Will bring withal its blessing.

The buried seed must rot in earth
Ere it produce the flower,
And the weak plant to fructify
Must have both shine and shower.

So man, to gain development,
Must struggle with life's crosses,
And view with calm philosophy
His trials and his losses.

A deadly poisonous weed may yield
A salve of purest healing;
The sweetest bloom may poisonous be,
Although its bane concealing.

Things are not always as they seem,
But still 'twas Heaven designed them;
And we should class them all as good
And take them as we find them.

Little we know of this brief life,
And nothing of its sequel;
Then let us take in humble trust
All that may seem unequal.

God's ways are not our ways,
And he certainly should be trusted.
All that is wrong, in his good time,
Will surely be adjusted.

Letter from "Gilderoy."

Well, my brother, what is regeneration? It is a change of nature—a change from the love and practice of sin to the love of God and the practice of virtue, or right living. It is to be born of God, born from above; to be made a new creature in Christ Jesus. In regeneration one spiritually dead, dead to God and the good, is made alive, alive to God and the right. By whom is this change wrought? By the Holy Ghost, the Spirit of God, the third Person in the Trinity. He is the life-giver—specially the giver of spiritual life. What are the conditions of regeneration, or spiritual life? Repentance toward God and faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. To repent is to give up sin; to believe is to lay hold on God.

Is regeneration a perfect work? Of course, it is. God never does imperfect work. It is a complete, radical, thorough change of nature. To say less than this is to charge God with imperfection and folly. Men born of God are fully and perfectly born. They are wholly and not partially born.

What is justification? It is the full and free forgiveness of sin. It is a judicial act of God whereby one guilty of sin is accounted guiltless, or free from sin. What is the condition of justification? The same as in regeneration—turning from sin, turning to God. What is the difference between regeneration and justification? The first is a change wrought in us, and the second is a change in the mind of God toward us. In regeneration we are turned toward God, and in justification God turns toward us. Why does God forgive us and turn toward us? Because we believe in his Son, and accept him as our Savior, as the propitiation and satisfaction for our sins. Does regeneration precede justification, or justification regeneration? For order of thought we put justification first; but, as a matter of fact, they, perhaps, take place at the same instant—are synchronous. God forgives whomsoever he regenerates, and gives a new heart to all whom he forgives. If a forgiven and regenerate sinner should die, would he go to heaven? Of course, he would. He is a child of God, and would go and live with him forever. There is nowhere else for him to go. When God justifies, or forgives, a sinner, does he forgive both actual and original sin? He forgives all the sin, or sins, of which, or for which, the sinner is guilty and condemned in his sight. "There is, therefore, now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit." The corruption of nature naturally engendered is preternaturally changed, or remedied, in regeneration. This is the object and purpose of regeneration; this the reason why we must be born again. Of course, all actual sins are forgiven, wiped out, forgotten, remembered against us no more forever in justification—that is, if we do not fall from grace and turn back to sin. In that case we are guilty for all—God's good Book for it.

What is sanctification? It is the full maturity and perfection of the new life imparted in regeneration; the full and entire consecration of all the redeemed and perfected powers of a saved soul to the love and service of God. What is the difference between regeneration and sanctification? Just the difference there is between a new-born babe and a full-grown, mature man. Regeneration is new life begun, and sanctification is that self same life matured. What should be the attitude of regenerate souls toward sanctification? It ought to be one of longing, seeking, hungering, desiring. "As new-born babes, desire the sincere milk of the word, that ye may grow thereby." The end sought is perfect manhood in Christ Jesus.

Is sanctification subsequent to regeneration? Of course, it is, just as manhood is subsequent to infancy and childhood. We are regenerated in order that we may be sanctified. God wants grown men, not dwarfs. Is natural depravity taken entirely out of us in sanctification? In the sense of corruption it is removed in regeneration. In the sense of weakness, imperfection, immaturity, ignorance, prejudice, and self-will, it is wholly or partially removed in entire sanctification. The partiality or entireness of sanctification depends largely on psychological conditions and knowledge. Anyone, everyone, may make a full and complete surrender of the human will to God. In this will be found the fullness and sweetness of the divine life. Is sanctification instantaneous or gradual? In some cases it is instantaneous, almost sudden; but in most cases it is gradual and by growth. Persons equally wise and good testify to both of these experiences. In some cases regeneration is gradual, in others instantaneous. The time element enters largely into all the operations of the human mind and soul. It is unwise to say that sanctification always is instantaneous, or to say that it always is gradual. It may be one or the other. I got religion in four hours after conviction, and I have been going on to perfection for fifty years next February.

The mark set before us is perfection in love, and it matters little whether we come to it in a minute or a month. Instantaneous sanctification is not one whit better than gradual sanctification. It is all precisely the same thing when we get to it, no matter how we come. The suddenly sanctified are no better than the gradually sanctified. We need not divide on the time involved in the work. A man is a man, whether he got his growth in sixteen years or twenty-four. How is sanctification obtained, or attained? Like every other blessing of grace—by faith in the Son of God. Faith is the condition of salvation in all parts, stages, and degrees.

GILDEROY.

Enlarging the Districts.

Let us look a little further into the question of enlarging the districts. Suppose this enlargement to be done, what advantage would come to us? Some brilliant figuring displays large gains to the financial interests of the church. One brother proposes reducing the nine districts of the North Mississippi Conference to seven, and thus save $2,057.30 to increase the receipts of preachers in charge, or of other claims. Another writer suggests four districts in place of the nine, and thus to "save $3,250 as a help to home missionary work, or, if not needed there, to swell the foreign missionary collection." Then he finds the impressive conclusion that at this ratio, "for the whole church we can easily dispense with 160 presiding elders, and thereby save $164,412 per annum, which we might turn into our missionary treasury, or in other places where the need is great." This may be plausible and attractive, but is not convincing. In any case of change, these preachers who are taken from the districts must be put to work in other places in the itinerant field, and must be supported there out of these supposed savings. Cutting away 160 districts may "dispense with 160 presiding elders," but does not "dispense" with 160 preachers, nor reduce the pay of one of them to zero. Shifting the laborers will not save funds. Either their number must be lessened, or loss must be paid for their support. Neither of these alternatives is contemplated.

It may still be replied that the more charges a district has the less will each charge have to pay for the presiding elder, and that here will be a gain. This statement looks well on its face, but suffers discredit by inspection, for we are not, and can not be, assured that the savings made in the charges by this course will come into the treasury of the church at all, either for improving the support of the preacher in charge, or for bettering the collections. Most of our people, finding themselves called on for less, will feel at liberty to put the savings to secular uses. We can scarcely expect them to do otherwise, for that is the tendency of large numbers of our members. Comparatively few pay more than they are assessed: the many pay far less. That sense of obligation and liberality which annually allows so large a deficit on allowances for the preachers and on the collections, can hardly be trusted to make these savings secure to the church for her use.

The complaint made of the disparity between what is paid to presiding elders and to preachers in charge, will not be pacified by enlarging the districts. As great a difference exists between the best and the least-paid pastors. Now, if the assessments for presiding elders were reduced one-half, and the half thus saved were paid by each charge to its own preacher, that would give the largest increase to the least needy preacher, and help the one whose need cries for relief to an inconsiderable fraction. The assumed remedy would fail. To expect one charge to turn over its money to the support of another is even more hopeless.

The real remedy for failures in our financial economy can not depend on the limitations of districts, but must rely upon the fidelity of our people to legitimate demands of established order. I venture to believe that if allowances and apportionments are fairly made, there is not a charge in the North Mississippi Conference that can not adequately meet every item. Our people are not taxed to the verge of any just complaint. The church does not ask for more than a conservative economy in the conduct of her work requires, and if it were paid, there would be no serious lack in any part.

It seems clear, at a glance, that the number and size of districts should depend on the needs of the work. Whether we should have districts at all has been settled and fixed in the very life and growth of our form of Methodism. The function of presiding elder in our organized system is distinct and essential, and, therefore, should be made as effective as possible. Fitness of the man for the place must be guarded here as carefully as in any other part of the field; but also the field must be arranged so as to afford the presiding elder the conditions essential to his proper work. In doing this, I would take no further account of the financial feature than that the district should be able to support its elder. Then let all concerned unite to give him the heartiest and thoroughest access to the people, and a loyal co-operation in the work he is sent to do. He is to be loved as a man of God, and honored in his office. That the pastor may be a greater preacher, and just as able to preside in a quarterly Conference, is quite possible; but whenever this is perchance the case, it is quite unseemly to make note of it, and by no means proves that the presiding elder is not needed there. His preaching and presidency are still proper in that charge, and many other considerations call for his presence. He decides questions of law, arbitrates disputes, gives advice in divers cases of policy and expedience, instructs the officiary in their relations and duties, gives the force of his instruction and influence to the maintenance and development of all parts of our spiritual and ecclesiastical economy, and in this way helps the preacher in charge and the people as otherwise they could not be helped. Add to all this the assistance the presiding elder must be to the Bishops in making the appointments, and we have conditions that make him essential to the efficiency of our itinerant ministry. He is especially needed by the young preachers as a model, a guide and counselor. His wise and strong and brotherly hand must hold in harmony every interest of the church in his district. If he is to touch and know and move the people, he must mingle with them. Limited districts, that allow Saturday and Sunday for nearly all the quarterly meetings, give the needed opportunities for such thorough intercourse, and for a service more satisfactory and useful to all concerned. The presiding elder can not be too well prepared to represent all the interests of his district in the Annual Conference. Meantime, in all this he must have home and needed rest.

Christian Perfection—What It Is.

We notice in last week's issue of the ADVOCATE an article from Bro. W. S. Harrison on the above subject that we wish to notice. We accept in the main Bro. Harrison's definition of Christian perfection, so far as we understand him to say it is a normal Christian growth; but we can not see how Bro. Harrison can so misunderstand the "second-blessing" people as to their doctrine on the subject of sanctification and perfection as to say "the differences of opinion" on the subject have "originated largely, we think, from an effort to shape all men's attainments in grace by some men's experience," while they lay great store by their experience, and think it presumption and arrogance in anyone to object to the "second blessing," for in so doing you call in question an experience which they claim to have, and by calling it in question you confess that you have it not, and that no man can act with any certainty as judge or witness in matters of religion without an experience. But the "differences of opinion" on this subject rest on quite a different basis, and involves the fundamental doctrines of the church.

The "second-blessing" school in our church teach that Christian perfection is mainly the outgrowth of sanctification; but they define the "second blessing" to be a subsequent work of grace to regeneration, which they call entire sanctification, and such a radical change of the nature of the believer as to kill out the old Adam, and exterminate depravity, and destroy the carnal mind. This a work instantaneous by faith. They claim that this doctrine rests on the fact of indwelling sin, human depravity, and the formula of doctrine is stated thus: "Regeneration is justification and the infusion of life;" "Sanctification is the change of nature and the cleansing of the heart."

Disguise the "second blessing" as they may, all the facts above stated are included in it, and just so long as "the differences of opinion" rest on such statement of doctrine as minifies and robs regeneration of its legitimate place in the Bible statement of the doctrine, these differences will continue. The very word "regeneration" signifies a change of nature, and our Lord places the necessity of this new creation on the fact of the depravity of human nature. (John iii, 3-7.) Here Jesus affirms the necessity of the new birth. Nicodemus wonders at it, then Jesus declares, "That which is born of the flesh is flesh, and that which is born of the Spirit is spirit." This is so plain there is no need to cavil. Many other texts may be cited. We will notice one more. Romans vi, 6: "Our old man is crucified with him, that the body of sin might be destroyed." If it be questioned, When is the old man crucified? we answer, Certainly when the new man is made. How can you make a new man out of an old man without destroying the old man as you make the new?

The most surprising thing is that Bro. Harrison should say, "We do not doubt that experience, do not object to it, but rejoice in it," and then virtually ignores it by "insisting that it should not be made a rule by which to measure all Christian experience." So we see, if their doctrine is true, then the "second blessing" is a rule to measure all Christian experience, for there could be no sanctification without it.

Now, if Bro. Harrison means (as we think he must) by "a second blessing" the being filled with the Holy Ghost, which is the consequent result of full consecration, and not the killing of the old Adam and removing of depravity—if this is his meaning, he should have said so, since to accept the "second blessing" is to acknowledge all that is involved in the theory as taught.

The disposition of many of our preachers to cover up the main issue with the hope of obtaining peace is misleading, and in the end injurious to our Zion. What is the use of proclaiming, "Peace, peace, where there is no peace," for while we by conservative means work for peace, disintegration goes on, we trust not largely, but it is surely moving on. Many good men and women are being misled. Some are being more or less injured in their spirit toward their church, pastor, and neighbors who differ with them; others are lost to the church entirely.

This is not all the harm being done by this "second-blessing" movement. Great numbers take their religious organ, and ignore their Conference organ, and read on one side of the question only, and this a paper that has no connection with their church, and stands in opposition to the spirit and polity of same; and organizing "Holiness Bands" and prayer meetings not of the church; securing camp grounds and property, the title as distinct and separate from the church as the property of the citizen from the State. Since Methodism is connectional in all of her interests, what does all this mean but trouble.

You may expose or rebuke the extravagances to which the "second blessing" naturally leads, as did Mr. Wesley, and stop its wild force for a time, but until there is a restatement or a more definite statement of the doctrine of sin and depravity in our church, the trouble will continue. Ours is a great church, a mighty union, and not unity. Instead of studying the Bible closely for our statement of doctrine, it is natural to let others do our thinking, and after the great and good men who wrote on theology in the past have died and gone to heaven, their work (with most men) becomes too sacred to criticise. Again, there are not a few people who believe all the best things in religion have been lost to the present generation, as they imagine in the decline of spiritual religion. And in going back to past generations for theology, it seems so natural to imbibe the thought of the writer as expressed, and go no further on than he did. If a writer of to-day presumes to differ with one of "the fathers," these brethren hold up their hands in holy horror. I hope our church will do something to settle this question authoritatively, that we may have uniformity of doctrine among us.

W. M. YOUNG.

Col. O. J. Moore.

Col. O. J. Moore died at his home in Winona, Miss., Aug. 22, 1896. He had reached the advanced age of eighty-four, and his death, though the occasion of deep sorrow, was not unexpected.

He came to Mississippi from Virginia, the State of his nativity, more than fifty years ago, and during this long period he lived in the same vicinity, enjoying the esteem and confidence of his fellow-citizens in the highest degree. The writer has rarely known a more remarkable man.

One of the most conspicuous features of his life was his great force of character. His personality was strongly marked. He possessed wonderful physical and mental energy, and marvelous industry and perseverance characterized him even in extreme old age. He brought things to pass, and put the stamp of his individuality upon everything about him. It is not often that a man even witnesses, during a long life, such changes as he wrought. Living on a large plantation, he achieved great success as an agriculturist, and saw a large town spring up around him and spread out over his broad fields. His farm home, where he lived and died, stands in the midst of this beautiful town; and Winona is not only inseparably associated with his memory, but its municipal enactments wear the impress of his powerful will.

Col. Moore displayed great boldness and aggressiveness in all movements involving moral reforms. His convictions were strong and courageously avowed. No matter what antagonisms his course might develop, he was never deterred in advocating the right. He was often in the midst of turbulent scenes, but he never wavered or lowered his colors. His brave and consistent stand in favor of the cause of prohibition when it involved obloquy, and sometimes personal peril, commanded admiration and respect even from foes. He displayed extraordinary gifts in managing large business affairs. Sagacity, rare and discriminating discernment, enabled him to win success where thousands failed. Throughout his long and eventful career our honored friend appeared to be always actuated by patriotism and philanthropy, and in prosperity and adversity it could be said of him, "He maintained his integrity."

With Col. Moore devotion to his church was a ruling passion. He loved Methodism with all the ardor of his strong nature. He was often honored with positions in her chief councils. With laudable pride he gloried in the history of his great church, and never tired of recounting her wonderful achievements. He never wavered in loyalty to her polity, and with unfaltering faith in the truth of her glorious doctrines he went from us in the full assurance of hope.

W. B. MURRAH.

Presiding Elders and Districts.

The burden of argument for fewer and larger districts seems to be to save the expense of presiding elder's salary. If indeed the church has gotten too liberal, or its running expenses too heavy, to drop off a few presiding elders would be a splendid way to save expense. We would not only have less to pay for presiding elders, but the presiding elders' short and inopportune visits would make it impossible for them to encourage and stimulate the people to liberality, and other collections would dry up.

We would save some on missions, church extension, Conference funds, and so on. Some have suggested that the pastor could attend to these things without the presiding elder's help, and some preachers or churches could do better without the presiding elder, and they did not want him on Sunday; that the pastor was a superior man, and they did not want to be bored with the elder.

Is it possible that the presiding eldership has become a burden to the church? Nay, verily; if there be such contrast, it is either simply a personal fancy that prefers one preacher to another, which instances are few and far between, and does not argue that the elder is an inferior man, but that our tastes and fancies differ, or that the presiding eldership is a mere nominal relation and serves to give men who are unacceptable as pastors a place to thrive. This I do not believe.

Our presiding elders are subbishops, and should be the next best talent the church can afford, to give dignity and power to the office and the church. May it ever be so.

I have been studying the North Mississippi Conference a little, and find we can have eleven districts very conveniently, and each presiding elder get a very good living, and each charge pay just what it did last year for presiding elders. The powers have kept the church in good running order for, lo! these many years, and I have confidence that they can still keep it from falling to pieces.

Daily Duties as Means of Grace.

Life is God's gymnasium. He takes the measures; we do not know what they are. He puts us in our places, and gives us what discipline we need. The ministers call churches means of grace, and prayer a means of grace, and the Bible a means of grace; and so they are. But also your shop is a means of grace, and your kitchen is a means of grace, and your social gathering is a means of grace, and your more dull and stupid cook is a means of grace—or disgrace, just as you choose to make them. Let a man go into life believing this, taking life as his school preparing for the life beyond, and what a glorious thing it is to live! Even failure do not discourage such a man, because he says, I have failed once, and now I know what my weak point is, I will correct it next time. Christ supplies our need by teaching us the meaning and significance of life.—Lyman Abbott, D. D.

The daily round of duty is full of probation and of discipline; it trains the will, heart, and conscience. We need not to be prophets or apostles. The commonest life may be full of perfection. The duties of home are a discipline for the ministries of heaven.—H. E. Manning.

Let us be content to do little, if God sets us at all little tasks. It is but pride and self-will which says, "Give me something huge to fight, and I should enjoy that; but why make me sweep the dust?"—Charles Kingsley.

There never did, and never will, exist anything permanently noble and excellent in the character which is a stranger to the exercise of resolute self-denial.—Walter Scott.

First keep thyself in peace, and then shalt thou be able to make peace among others.—Thomas a Kempis.

Some Things I Don't Like.

I have long thought and felt that to have a choir on the side in front, so that they look down into the faces of the congregation, is a great hindrance to religious worship; for some of the choir (not all) are constantly making remarks, and often about different people in the congregation, and as "A. C." says, "How can we help seeing them?" I have been to church when it was no pleasure whatever to be there on account of the things of which I speak.

It is nice to have a choir sit on the front seats to carry the tune; but none of these side shows ever did anything to forward the glory of God. We all like new songs, but some old ones ought to be mixed in with them, so that all can sing. I do not think the choir ought to have a monopoly of the service of song. (Concerts will do for that.)

I don't suppose that in heaven there will be any solos. We will all be too joyful; we will all join in praising God. Why not do so now?

Our family came back from church a few Sundays ago. I asked them how they enjoyed service. Each one said, "Every thing was so dry; nothing but new songs." Oh, how my heart did ache to think that even at church God received so little praise. Church is the place that all should have equal privileges and as few hindrances as possible in worshiping God, and everyone that is putting anything in the way of public worship is keeping souls out of heaven. We must not only not put things in the way, but, by the grace of God, take them out of the way. I have never known a revival where the choir sang new songs exclusively. Things can happen in the congregation to drive the spirit of God out, just as it was that Achan kept the golden wedge and Babylonish garment and lost the battle.

The things that I have written and some of them that does drive the spirit of God out of our midst.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. J. S. Sanders, Rayne, La., Nov. 9: "I have just returned from Prudhomme City, where I have been assisting Bro. Whatley for a week in a meeting, and the good Lord gave us a great victory. A number of sanctifications and a few right sanctifications. Bro. Whatley has a hard field, but he has stood bravely by, and has sown well and cultivated the field with much self-denial and suffering, and there is a great harvest there awaiting for some one to gather into the Lord's garner. I am glad that our God tells us that the sowers and reapers shall rejoice together in his kingdom. God bless Bro. Whatley!"

Rev. A. T. Buck, Ethel, Miss., Nov. 7: "The ADVOCATE is becoming dearer to me every day. The Lord bless you and it! Hope to see you at Greenville soon. God has been the most gracious part of my ministry. When I reached the Ethel charge and realized the great need of a general revival all round, I asked definitely of the Lord, with a faith that was akin to 'the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen,' and surely my faith has been honored. The visible results are as follows: Added to the church, 105; additional family altars, 35; prayer meetings and Sunday-schools that did not suspend last Winter, two each. Six each will continue through this Winter. Collections ordered by the Annual Conference will be paid in full—something never done in the history of the charge. The Lord be praised!"

Rev. H. P. Lewis: "I am now closing out the thirty-ninth year of my ministerial life. I was received on trial in the Mississippi Conference at Brandon in 1857. Bishop Early presided, H. J. Harris was secretary. There were thirteen in the class. One brother made shipwreck of his faith, several located, one or two transferred to other Conferences; only three of us—viz., J. A. Vance, P. Howard and myself—retain our connection with our Mississippi Conference. I am the only one of the thirteen who has received an appointment every year. Bro. Howard was local a few years. Bro. Vance has been superannuated a few years. He is quite old and feeble, but has a gentle, sweet spirit. . . I have had a delightful year in most respects. The people have just simply been good to us. There has been no cloud-burst or hail storm, yet there has been but few days that we have not been remembered by some one. We have had to pay out but little money for rice, butter and milk. We are satisfied to stay here another year, if Bishop Hendrix will let us and it be God's will."

Rev. M. E. Tumlin, Nov. 7: "I am closing a very pleasant pastorate of four years on the Shannon charge, North Mississippi Conference. On the fourth Sunday of last month I received seven young people on profession of faith at Shannon. These were the children of our people, and well instructed at home and in the Juvenile Epworth League and Sunday-school. The first Sunday in this month I received three nice young people on profession at Pleasant Grove, where five young people had been received in the same way a little earlier in the season. Thus the work goes bravely on. This has been the happiest year, and most successful, of my pastorate here. I believe Bishop McTyeire was right in saying that 'the staying qualities of our preachers should be developed.' We have here at Shannon a comfortable parsonage, eleven artesian wells of splendid cold water and a real clever people. They have been uniformly kind to me and mine, and will have a place in our affections when we go hence. May we all come up to Conference with brave hearts and good reports, ready to do the work which the Master may have for us in the whitening fields which lie out before us."

Rev. J. C. Ellis, Leaksville mission, Enterprise district, North Mississippi Conference: "I am still here in South Mississippi, this being the closing up of my second year on this charge. We have had, as you know, a sad bereavement here, and no little hard work to do. We had no place to go to when we came here. But after leaving Westville and dear friends, thence to Meridian, where I left wife and children a few days with connections, and arrived on this work first Sunday in January, 1895. After a few days' survey of the work, Bro. L. A. Avers, Avera, Miss., opened doors for wife and children. At Leaksville, Miss., Bro. J. J. McInnis and Dr. Pool also did likewise. All this time I was looking forward to the erection of a parsonage, and, as you doubtless noticed from the pen of our beloved presiding elder, we succeeded in building a magnificent parsonage last year. You can not imagine how good I feel this frosty morning, sitting by a good warm fire at one of our triple brick fireplaces, erected about ten days ago. I was delighted to preach at Leaksville to a large, attentive congregation yesterday, with a beautiful new organ to lead the way in music. Brethren, we have a great deal to do here before we reach the climax, but I hope we are moving upward. We have some very good people here, while the masses are not so good. I think a little progress on all lines. What do you think?—Leaksville, noted for its dancing, has not had a dance since Spring, except some outsiders who came to the Soldiers' Reunion about a month ago, and, failing to get any house to dance in in Leaksville, danced on some plank laid on the ground in the court yard. Hurrah! for Green county! It is represented at E. M. F. College by three young ladies, and at Millsaps by two young men. Love to all."

Rev. D. W. Babb, Louisville circuit, North Mississippi Conference: "We are rapidly nearing the end of the Conference year. It seems to have been so short, yet packed full of duties, which continue until the very moment of starting to Conference. This has been a year of some prosperity to this circuit. A stirring revival at most all of our churches; 57 additions, and improvements on some church-buildings, and others provided for. Many persons have erected family altars, and more church papers taken than for years past. Our Sunday schools have been in fair working order, there being one at each church. Our collections ordered by the Conference will be full. I suppose the salaries of preachers will be paid. This is a people who are at peace among themselves, and unite in church enterprises much more readily than some other works. It is quite a pleasant charge in most respects. We are indebted to Bros. J. D. Newsom, J. E. Buck, George Farrish and B. P. Fullilove for efficient work in our last meetings. May the Lord reward them! The NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE is in good favor with the people. We expect to give you some more new subscribers and purchase more of the Pronouncing Bibles."

Rev. Wm. G. Evans, Patterson station, Louisiana Conference, Nov. 12: "On July 10 I was taken sick with typhoid-malarial fever, and was confined to my bed until Aug. 18, when I left for Chattanooga, Tenn., with my wife and baby, to visit my father. After a very pleasant and profitable visit of about six weeks, we reached home on Oct. 1, and entered at once into the hard work of reorganizing a church and its societies, when the preacher felt the need of reorganizing as much as anyone else. The Lord has blessed us, and we now feel that we are on the upgrade. On last Sunday (Nov. 8) I began a protracted meeting, and on Monday Rev. R. M. Blocker came to my assistance, and did good, hard, faithful and profitable work. My plan was to continue for two weeks, but the discovery of twenty-five or more cases of small pox in an isolated part of the town caused me to change my plans and close the meeting last night. I feel that much good has been done. We are winding up the year very satisfactorily. The finances, I hope, will all be up in full. We have now paid in full six of the ten assessments, and the assessments for ministerial support, and besides this have raised about $550 for other objects."

Woman's Work
Is never done, and it is especially wearing and wearisome to those whose blood is impure and unfit properly to sustain the wasting of nerve, muscle and tissue. The only remedy for tired, weak, nervous women is in building up by taking a good nerve tonic, blood purifier and vitalizer like Hood's Sarsaparilla. For troubles Peculiar to Women at change of season, climate or life, take

A Methodist Church, it is said, has sued a man and recovered eight dollars damages, because the defendant injured the floor of the building with tobacco spit. We fully agree with the Christian Standard when it says: "We are glad of it. If a man is such a slave to a filthy habit that he can not rest his jaws for even a couple of hours, let him remain outside the house of God. The Jews of the Old Testament would not worship if defiled by even so much as a touch of anything unclean. He is something which is both figuratively and actually unclean. There has been improvement in this respect, but even now one will find, occasionally, spittoons in church buildings. Their presence is an invitation to the tobacco-chewer, and they are as much out of place as a frying-pan or a curry-comb."

He that waits for an opportunity to do much at once may breathe out his life in idle wishes, and regret in the last hour his useless intentions and barren zeal.—Dr. Johnson.

Here are a few words from a woman to women. There is no theory about this letter. There is nothing about it that cannot be readily proven. It is a voluntary statement from a woman who has been restored to health and strength, and who wishes that her own experience may be duplicated by the experiences of others.

Mrs. L. Dedmon, of Fair Grove, Greene Co., Mo., writes. "In July 1895 I was confined. My confinement was premature. About six weeks after, I was taken with severe flooding. I had the best doctor the country afforded. I took medicine for about two months but got no better. I was very weak—could not do any of my work. Could scarcely lift a chair. Suffered with pain in my back and hips and had soreness deep, low down across me. I had inflammation and ulceration—so the doctor said. I concluded I would consult Dr. R. V. Pierce. I wrote to you giving you a full description of my case. You advised me to take your 'Favorite Prescription.' I began taking it at once. In three days I could feel a change. I took three bottles and the result was a complete cure. It has been six months since I used your medicine, and I feel no return of the disease at all. I wish also to say I had not been strong for many years. I had taken patent medicines and been attended by doctors but got no better. Today there is not a stronger woman in the country than I am. I suffer no pain at all, can work all day and not be tired at night. I can cheerfully say that I believe I owe my health to the use of your valuable medicine, and your good advice."

Mrs. L. Dedmon

If a copy of Dr. Pierce's "Common Sense Medica Adviser" was in every house in the United States, half the sickness in the country could be prevented. This great work of over a thousand pages is completely illustrated with over three hundred pictures. It contains many simple inexpensive receipts for curing the common ailments which arise in every family. By following its advice, simple home treatment may be given for many little ailments. Serious sickness may be prevented and many doctor bills saved. Nearly 700,000 copies have been sold at $1.50 per volume, and now an edition, paper-bound, of half a million is being distributed absolutely free. It will be sent post-paid to any one who will send 21 one-cent stamps, to pay the cost of mailing only, to the World's Dispensary Medical Association, No. 663 Main Street, Buffalo, N. Y. If you want French cloth binding, send 10 cents extra, 31 cents in all.

An Appalling Record.

The following table showing the number of homicides in the United States for the last ten years is worthy of the attention of every citizen of this great republic:

1887	2,335
1888	2,184
1889	3,567
1890	4,290
1891	5,906
1892	6,791
1893	6,615
1894	9,800
1895	10,500

This record is simply appalling. Just think of ten thousand homicides in one year. England had in the same year only about 200. Even Italy, red-handed Italy, the home of the Mafia and similar oath-bound assassination societies, must now hide her diminished head in the presence of the United States of America. Italy's murder record for 1895 is only about 3,000—less than a third of our aggregate of bloodshed. We doubt if there is a barbarous tribe in the heart of "the Dark Continent" that can match our record. And the most alarming feature of the situation is that this awful crime is increasing with fearful rapidity. Our murder record for '95 is 700 per cent. greater than it was in '86. A similar increase for the next ten years will give us more than 75,000 murders per annum. Ten years later, unless we call a halt, more than a half million of our citizens will be slain per year. This is the most awful picture we have ever gazed upon. Would that we could put it out of our sight. But how can we? It stares us in the face each morning as we scan the pages of the daily papers. It meets our gaze wherever we go. Is it not time that every good citizen should bestir himself for the arrest of this awful down-grade movement? Is it not possible to create in the course of time a public sentiment that will change all this?

At present it is a simple fact that murder is the one crime which men can commit with the greatest assurance of immunity from punishment. The thief, the burglar, the depredator upon property of any kind, is much more likely to find himself in a felon's cell than the man who takes the life of his fellow-man. The murderer who is rich or who has influential friends usually escapes punishment altogether, and is frequently the recipient of an unusual amount of social consideration. The time is ripe for a revolution in public sentiment and in our system of administering criminal law. No good citizen can thoughtfully contemplate our record for the past decade without a feeling of alarm.

Opportunities for what the world calls great deeds do not come very often; but opportunities for good deeds come every day of our lives. The infidel will not accept the Bible as authority in a matter of practical morality, but he never fails to use the good old book in an argument if he possibly can.

Ordered Footsteps.

BY MRS. D. I. PURSER.

The story of the conversion of Alberto Diaz, the Baptist missionary of Cuba, is unique and thrilling. Nearly two decades have passed since this man was led mysteriously to the Light of the Nations. It was during the rebellion of that time, that Dr. Diaz, then a captain of the Insurgent forces, found himself compelled to leave Cuba. He jumped into the water on a raft, and for twenty-four hours floated on the Gulf of Mexico, not knowing what would befall him. A vessel bound for New York took him on board. In due time, he was deposited in New York. Unable to speak a word of English, without a cent in his pocket, a stranger in a strange land, he says of that dismal hour that he knew not whether it was better to die by Spaniard hands, or trust to the mercy of the waves, or be alive in New York. But that God who orders all our steps, who watches over all his creatures, found for him a lodging place in that vast habitation where, it seemed to him, as if no man cared for his brother-man. But the worst had not yet come. Accustomed to the mild air of Cuba, our stranger was unable to resist the chilling blasts of our Northern Winter and fell a victim to pneumonia. Death hovered near him. One day a strange woman came to his room and read out of a Book she brought with her. After she read she closed her eyes, folded her hands, and her lips moved as if she were talking. To Dr. Diaz it was as "sounding brass and a tinkling cymbal;" for not a word did he understand of the reading or the prayer: for prayer he now knows it to have been. For fifteen days this same strange reading and praying went on, and he verily thought within himself that he had fallen into the hands of a lunatic woman. About this time he had recovered sufficiently to reach out his hand and to ask for the strange Book. Being a Catholic, he managed to read the words, Jesus, Matthew, Luke, etc. He soon found that for the first time in his life he held in his hand a Bible. He determined when he recovered to translate it; and by the help of a dictionary he had nearly finished translating one book, when an acquaintance told him he could get the Book in Spanish. He purchased it forthwith, and soon learned "to know Him, whom to know is life eternal." To-day he says that this strange visitor was the wisest of women; understanding the subtilty of the Holy Spirit's actions, knowing that the power of God was not limited to man's ability to understand the words of man, she did her part and left the result with God, to whose loving mercy she commended this foreigner.

What has been the result? As soon as amnesty was declared Diaz went back to Cuba, and for about thirteen years he has preached that gospel which indeed has been to him the power of God unto salvation. Under his instructions 2,700 have been born again into the kingdom of God, and have put on Christ in baptism. Of his wonderful hospital, where he operates with his own hand, of his cemetery, of his "daily Sunday-school" we need not now speak. We prefer to ponder over the conversion of a man who, under God, already has brought his thousands to Jesus' feet. Involuntarily we ask, Where is that wisely-foolish, or foolishly-wise woman, who wasted (?) time talking in an unknown tongue to the poor, despised foreigner? Then we bethink us of Andrew, who "first findeth his own brother Simon," and saith unto him, "We have found the Messias, which is being interpreted the Christ"—and away down in our hearts we realize that she, like Andrew, can afford to live a life "felt, but not noticed," and that of her it can truly be said:

"Not herself, but the truth that in life she has spoken,
Not herself, but the seed, that in life she has sown
Shall pass on to ages, all about her forgotten,
Save the truth she has spoken, the things she has done."

Very close must have been the fellowship that extended between her and her Savior, very intimate the friendship with the Holy Spirit! How little she cared for the praises of the world! for the rights of woman! But she had read that "the steps of a good man are ordered by the Lord," and she understood the secret of that ordering. Faithfully and humbly she sought to obey him, in a modest, womanly way; carrying out her womanly instincts to "do what she could."

"She could not cross the ocean
but, in his own way, God had brought the heathen to her own door, and for that sick, penniless tramp (as he must have appeared to her) she did her utmost, committing the keeping of this wanderer's soul to Him who rules over all.

Oh! for more lives that are "hid with Christ in God!" With more such living might it not more frequently be said of us all, that "the things which have happened unto us have fallen out to the glory of God?"

The above account of the conversion of Diaz from the gifted pen of our friend, Mrs. Purser, wife of Dr. D. I. Purser, pastor of Valence Street Baptist Church in this city, was written at our request. Sister Purser has understated the facts of the case in estimating the magnitude of Diaz's work. She speaks of 2,700 souls being brought to Christ through his instrumentality. His present membership is 2,700. She, therefore, fails to take note of the hundreds who during the thirteen years of his ministry have gone to "the better land." Dr. Diaz is an educated man and a skillful, up-to-date physician. Like many another missionary, he has laid all his professional attainments at the feet of Jesus. His hospital is an invaluable adjunct to his church. He is also carrying on extensive educational work that is distinctively Christian in its character, and thus through another channel reaching the hearts of his countrymen and bringing them to Christ. Is it not marvelous that so great results should have been achieved by means so simple—a little praying and Scripture reading in an unknown tongue? That good woman was not working for glory. She did not dream that she was doing a great thing. She was simply doing what her hands found to do for the Savior whom she loved. It is very doubtful if she knows to this day anything at all about the magnificent results of her obscure work. But she will know by and by, when God says to her: "Well done, good and faithful servant. Thou hast been faithful over a few things. I will make thee ruler over many things."

May we and our readers all learn the important lessons that are contained in the above fragment of missionary history.

The Dispute Settled.

The Venezuelan question has been amicably settled between the United States and Great Britain. Great Britain agrees to submit her claims to the territory in dispute to a board of five arbitrators, two of whom are to be appointed by the Supreme Court of the United States and two others by the Supreme Judiciary of Great Britain. The fifth arbitrator is to be King Oscar of Sweden and Norway. It is agreed, however, that all territory which has been occupied by British subjects for fifty years is not subject to arbitration, but belongs to Great Britain. All lovers of peace will rejoice that this dispute which at one time seemed about to result in war has been settled amicably and honorably to all concerned. Great Britain comes out of the contest with her honor untarnished and without even the semblance of humiliation, while our own government has won an imperishable crown of honor in having vindicated the Monroe doctrine as a tenet which must be accepted by all the nations of the earth. Our government also enjoys the honorable distinction of having taken the initiative in the pacific policy above outlined. It was our Secretary of State, Mr. Olney, who proposed to exempt from arbitration the territory which has been occupied for fifty years.

The most beneficent result of this agreement, however, is the impetus which has been given to the policy of international arbitration. How can the nations of the earth fail to see that it is a thousandfold wiser to settle their disputes with each other in this quiet, peaceful way rather than by the sword? May God speed the day when the nations of the earth shall learn war no more! That we are moving in this direction who can dispute?

The man who assumes the prerogative of being mean because it is "his way," should not complain if others despise him because it is "their way."

In the Living Present.

The English government looks upon kleptomania as theft. Hence the actions of the wife of the California millionaire merchant, Castle. Perhaps chivalry, in our country, has modeled public opinion in holding female "kleptomaniacs" guiltless. If said opinion be correct, then the habitual toper, gambler, swearer, etc., is also without blame. Have an idiosyncratic predisposition in that direction. We would recommend punishment in each case.

In the Chicago preacher's meeting Dr. Philips produced an able paper on The Qualification of a Pastor: Thorough education a sine qua non. He must be a man in the full sense of that term. Abhor equivocation. In and out of the pulpit the same dignified gentleman. His word adamantine. Avoids debt; rather lives on a pittance than enslave himself by borrowing. Is cordial; nevertheless discreetly reserved. The embodiment of honesty.

No; the newspapers of our day are not the leaders and moulders of public opinion. Simply reflect the same. It was in anti-bellum times that editorials were called "leaders." Now newspapers are no more than their name implies. But in gathering and distributing the news wonderful improvements have been made. Telegraph and telephone are their obedient servants. The reportorial system amazingly perfect. Type-setting machines and improved presses facilitated their manufacture. The price astonishingly low. Several papers in every family. Not to be fanatically one-sided we ought to read the papers of different churches and parties.

Russia is twice as large as the United States. It numbers one hundred and thirty million inhabitants. Twenty-seven nationalities are represented. The country is a linguistic Babel. The empire has not a constitutional government. Has no Parliament. The Czar and a few chosen advisers make and execute the law. Antiquated soldiers fill the judiciary. The latter is deemed a hoax. The government is generally religiously fanatical. It tolerates no Protestant missionaries in its boundary. Its authorized clergy are venial, mercenary, ignorant, coarse.

Sweden has six million inhabitants. Of that number only two thousand are Roman Catholic. All others Protestant. In that respect Sweden occupies the first rank. The noble daring of Gustavus Adolphus for Protestantism has not been forgotten. Of all nations Sweden is the most intelligent and virtuous. In many towns the jails are empty. The royal family are devout. Always attend divine service. Pauperism almost unknown.

Calcutta, East India, is an educational centre. It has twenty colleges. Three universities. Forty high schools. The English language is almost exclusively spoken. The mission cause thrives best in the interior. In Calcutta fifty-five English-speaking inhabitants are without church affiliation. No; learning does not make necessarily pious. Analphabetism a rarity. And a rarity is the fear of God.

One of our government's statisticians in Washington declares that the bicycle craze has not decreased the number of conveyances drawn by horses. More carriages and buggies now than ever before. Those who ride bicycles are not the class which own horse and buggy. Street car companies complain that the bicycle decreases their income.

ICH DIEN.

They are mistaken who suppose that the hard-worked mother of a large family of children is poorly paid. Remuneration in gold and silver she may not receive; but is there no compensation in the complacency with which she will look in after years upon the noble achievements of the sons and daughters whose lives she has moulded?

The calm, thoughtful and persistent worker is a force in the church that can not be ignored or underestimated. He makes no fuss or display, but his quiet and effective work counts. He is neither officious nor meddlesome, but modest and reliable. He is always in his assigned place, doing his duty faithfully day by day, and in the end his counsel and labors show up to the glory of God and the good of the community.—Presbyterian.

A New Book.

INFANT BAPTISM. By Isaac L. Peebles, of the Mississippi Conference. Nashville, Tenn.: Publishing House of the M. E. Church, South. Barton & Smith, Agents. 1896

The work above named is a pamphlet of 24 pages published in the usual workmanlike style of our "Book Concern." The design of the work is thus stated in the preface: "I was reared a Baptist; and, although I never united with that church, I was quite opposed to infant baptism, and even after I joined the Methodist Church it troubled me much until I gave the subject a thorough investigation. Since this investigation I have become perfectly satisfied that infant baptism is right, and that all infants should be baptized.

"I have written this pamphlet with the hope of strengthening the faith of some weak saint and of giving needed light to some one who knows not what to believe. The blessings of God rest upon this effort to do good!"

It is divided into three chapters under the following heads: Infant Baptism Considered Historically, Infant Baptism Considered Scripturally, Some Objections to Infant Baptism. We commend the work to pastors who feel the need of a brief treatise of this sort for circulation among their members.

Bro. Malone Bereaved.

MR. EDITOR: The youngest son of Rev. J. W. and Mrs. Lillian K. Malone was buried to-day. He was twenty-eight months old, bright and beautiful child, and a general favorite of everybody. He was very well all morning, and had just gone down stairs with his nurse after an hour of play with his father who was sick, when without a moment's warning he began struggling for breath. The nurse carried him up stairs, but his little spirit was gone ere he reached his father's room. The whole community is in mourning with Bro. and Sister Malone. T. W. LEWIS.

Grenada, Nov. 14, 1896.

Praise is becoming. Nothing is more acceptable to God, or more beneficial to the soul. It brings us into sympathy and harmony with the heavenly hosts. Angels and saints never cease their songs. Neither should we. Times change, but God does not. Jesus is the same yesterday, to-day and forever. The Holy Spirit ever abides. Life passes, but eternity draws on. Amidst earth's mutations, God's love, peace, helpfulness and salvation endure to revive and bless. Death comes, and then Jesus lights up the gloom and introduces the departing soul into brighter and more glorious realms. As the moments fly, let them be sanctified and beautified by fresh memorials of praise to the God of all goodness and grace.—Presbyterian.

From the way the Jews are again taking up their habitation in Palestine, it seems conclusive that the prophecies in the Scriptures respecting their return to their original inheritance are being fulfilled. It is stated on good authority that the residents in Jaffa have increased in ten years from 15,000 to 42,000. Bishop Blyth, of Jerusalem, reports that in 1841 there were only 8,000 Jews in Palestine; in 1883 they numbered 23,000; they are now 70,000. These are significant figures in the light of Rom. ii, 15: "If the casting away of them be the reconciling of the world, what shall the receiving of them be, but life from the dead?"—Mid-Continent.

Henry Ward Beecher said: "A Christian is the best commentary on the New Testament, but there are not enough such commentaries to send out. The edition is small." There are enough nominal Christians, and inconsistent Christians, and half-hearted Christians. But the evidence of their lives is against Christianity rather than for it. Their influence is like depreciated currency; it does not pass at par, and is always regarded with suspicion and doubt. The Christianity that has a par value in the kingdom of God is an infallible witness to the superiority and utility of the system.—Methodist Protestant.

The devil laughs, and Christ's work languishes, when Christians stand round admiring their own deeds. We need to realize that man, in his ignorance, never did a perfect thing; and then, perhaps, less time will be spent in mutual admiration.—Rev. W. S. Fleming.

We congratulate our readers upon the privilege they enjoy of reading in this issue another article from the graceful pen of Miss Mary V. Dave of Martin College, Pulaski, Tenn. The name of this bright, brainy woman is a household word in Mississippi, her history of that great commonwealth being in use in all the public schools of the State. A royal welcome from editor and readers awaits her whenever she can spare the time to favor us with one of her literary gems.

Thanksgiving Day.

The appointment of a Thanksgiving Day, Nov. 26, by the Chief Executive of our Republic, is right and proper. Divine Providence is thus recognized. The President, in the pertinent proclamation, says inferentially to young and old, Christians and Gentiles, that the Lord he is the God. We thank the Lord for a Christian government.

To render thanks for benefits received is a sacred duty. Justice requires such rendition. Ingratitude is dishonesty—a failure to pay what we owe. The best we can give to God is grateful acknowledgment of his benefactions. Well says Milton in his Paradise Lost:

> ....."A grateful mind
> By owing owes not, but still pays; at once > Indebted and discharged."

Certainly some have suffered afflictions during the past year. Pecuniary losses, disappointment, business disaster, impoverishment. Sickness in the family. Death of those who were dear to our heart. Unfortunate social complications. Perhaps waywardness of progeny. Abuse of confidence, betrayal of supposed friends, persecution, etc. But these hardships were, comparatively, few and small. God's favors outnumbered his frowns. Dry your tears and exclaim: "Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all his benefits."

We have reason to be grateful for prosperous church work. Had faithful pastors. Were edified, established, confirmed. Have grown in grace and in the knowledge of God. Found occasion to relieve distress, feed the hungry, clothe the naked. Besides, we witnessed the awakening, repentance and conversion of sinners. Heard the shout of victory. Our church has developed numerically and spiritually. No unholy division and acrimonious contention. Zion is dear to our heart.

Our home affairs have been pleasant. Peace and happiness prevailed. Piety and filial devotion of our children a source of much gratification. Connubial affection intense. Here and there the reverse may have been true; in the majority of cases home has been a miniature heaven.

We have enjoyed a pecuniary competency. Blessed are those who do not want much; they are easily satisfied. We prayed for our daily bread, and we received it. Had employment, sufficient income. Loved to work and worked. Found pleasure in same. Regular, honest employment a great boon. Willingness to submit to the curse of eating our bread in the sweat of our brow, converts said curse into blessing.

The harvest has been abundant. The industrious tiller of the soil found ample compensation for his toil. The product plentiful; the price for same adequate. The Lord prevented mildew, hail, floods. True, drouth has afflicted some, but even this affliction has taught many to depend more fully on God. Generally, the land produced more than enough for man and beast.

We have escaped the scourge of contagious diseases. Cholera, small-pox, diphtheria, yellow fever, etc., did not visit us. No epidemic. Not many sad processions to the city of the dead. The dolorous sound of mourning bells not often heard. The death-rate has not been more than ordinary.

Our beloved country has enjoyed peace. No war. Carnage—fearful to contemplate. Kill fellow-men in order to achieve our ends, the ends of leaders. Yes, there has been unwise agitation in Congress, in certain social circles, even in some pulpits, tending to wholesale manslaughter; but said blustering orators—who would never themselves shoulder a musket—failed in their nefarious designs. We can live contentedly under our own vine and fig tree. Peace, sweet peace, has reigned in our borders. Plowshares did not require conversion into swords.

Then, come, make a joyful noise unto the Lord. Sing his praise. Laud his holy name. My soul shall make her boast in the Lord. Praise ye the Lord! JEAN PAUL.

Epworth League Conference.

The Meridian Epworth League District Conference, which was announced in the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, some time since, convened in Central Church, Meridian, Wednesday, Nov. 4, 1896, and, notwithstanding the opponents of both election and circus, a goodly number of delegates and preachers assembled to hear the opening sermon, at 11 A. M., by Rev. J. T. Nicholson, of Newton, Miss. At 3 o'clock P. M., after devotional exercises conducted by Rev. Ransom J. Jones, presiding elder of the district, Rev. A. T. Bell, chairman of the Committee on Epworth Leagues, called the Conference to order, giving notice of the election of officers for permanent organization, and the following were unanimously elected by acclamation for the ensuing year: Rev. A. T. Bell, president; Rev. H. W. Van Hook, first vice-president; Miss Anna Saunders, second vice-president; Mrs. H. H. Warren, third vice-president; D. S. Harmon, secretary; H. Mellard, assistant secretary.

Hon. F. G. Lewis delivered the address of welcome, and President Bell responded in a few appreciative words.

The Conference was in session two days, and every phase of League work was discussed to the delight and edification of all. Several very interesting and instructive papers were also read by member of the Conference on the different departments of work. Seven senior and three junior Leagues were reported with a combined membership of over three hundred and sixty, and as having raised during the year an amount exceeding one hundred and forty dollars for all purposes.

Rev. T. B. Clifford, president of State Central League, was present during the Conference, and delivered several very eloquent and interesting addresses to the delight of all present.

That the Conference resulted in great good can not be doubted, for several delegates and ministerial brethren who were a little skeptical of the League and its work were converted and expressed an everlasting friendship. The spiritual feature of the Conference was especially eminent. The farewell service conducted by Bro. Clifford was greatly enjoyed. It was then that all felt the power of God in the soul. Some made short talks, others during the singing gave their hands in testimony of their love to God and his power to save. The work in the district has been strengthened and the leaguers bound closer together by this meeting. H. MELLARD, Asst. Sec'y.

From Bro. Streater.

The brethren and some of the sisters have criticised my article very severely, but I want to say that I entertain the very kindest feelings toward each of them, and if I have seemed to be personal and have thereby offended anyone, I am heartily sorry for it. If some of the brethren could see some of the letters which I have received, they would conclude that I was not as badly mistaken about some things as they thought I was.

"The Way to Christ Made Plain."

MR. EDITOR: I want to thank you for the kindly notice of my modest little book, "The Way to Christ Made Plain," that appeared in the CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, of last week. Allow me to say further that this book supplies a conspicuous need of these times—a need which the modern literature on this subject most signally fails to supply. It is very noticeable that the most of the popular works that teem from the press now, and which profess to teach men how to come to Christ, omit and ignore repentance, restitution and regeneration. Very few of them teach restitution as a necessary part of repentance, or regeneration as necessary to salvation. And many of the great evangelists leave these vital matters out of their sermons. I could give some remarkable instances of restitution as the fruit of the teaching in this little book. In these days of loose teaching and loose living we need to stress these fundamental doctrines with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven. This book can be ordered from the Publishing House at Nashville at ten cents a copy, or a dollar a dozen. It belongs to the Publishing House, and not to me. Yours truly,

W. M. LEFTWICH.

Members of the Mississippi Conference, Take Notice.

All the railroads of South Mississippi have agreed to the usual reduction in rates for all persons in attendance on the Mississippi Annual Conference. Pay your full fare coming, and be sure to get a certificate to that effect from the agent from whom you buy your ticket. This, when properly signed by the Conference secretary, will entitle you to a return ticket at one-third fare.

I give the arrival of passenger trains at Port Gibson: South bound—one at 2:14 A. M. and one at 9:07 A. M. (both A. M.). North bound—one at 4:46 P. M. and one at 11:30 P. M. (both P. M.).

Dr. Andrews has kindly notified you of the schedule of the locals.

MR. EDITOR: Please extend my fraternal greetings to Bro. K. A. Jones, and inform him that I have not yet passed over the river to the "golden shore." Though on the "roll of honor," I have served two churches this year as pastor, and, in the good providence of God, I have been able to attend to the work assigned me by my presiding elder, with good results, as in other years. The Lord has been with me, and the abiding presence of my Savior has cheered my heart, and made his service delightful. J. M. PUGH.

A Discovery by a Preacher.

A discovery has been made by Rev. J. W. Blosser, M. D., of Atlanta, Ga., which marks a new era in the treatment of Catarrh, Bronchitis, Catarrhal Deafness, Asthma, etc., of which he has made a special study for the last twenty years. The remedy is applied in a practical way, which brings it in direct contact with every affected spot. It destroys the disease germs or microbes, and makes a radical cure. Its use is convenient and pleasant. He desires to place it in the hands of every sufferer, and will mail a trial sample free to everyone who will address Dr. J. W. Our Machine Offer.

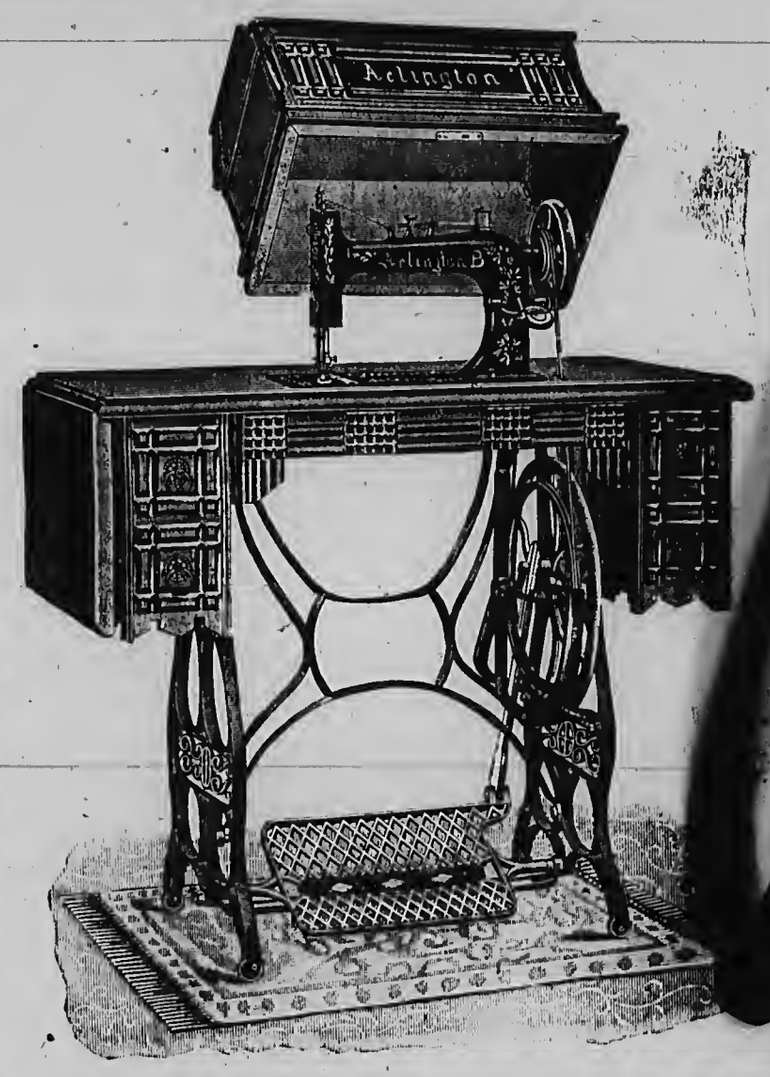
New Improved High-Arm "Arlington B" Self-Threading Sewing Machine.

A recorded certificate of warranty for 10 years accompanies each machine. The "Arlington B" is complete in every detail, combining all modern and late improvements, such as automatic bobbin winder, self-threading shuttle, self-setting needle, upper spring tension, etc.



The "Arlington B" self-threading sewing machine has a large high arm, its mechanical appearance is perfect, its adjustment is absolute, positive take up, convenient foot-rest, with the best style furniture, either oak or walnut; in addition to which each machine is furnished with the best steel combination attachments free, as follows: One tucker, one foot ruffler, one set of plain hemmers (five different widths up to seven-eighths of an inch), one binder, one shirring plate and one under-braider, packed in a handsome velvet lined case. It is also furnished with one foot hemmer, one screw driver, one wrench, one oil can with oil, one gauge, one package of needles, six bobbins and one instruction book.

THE HEAD is strong and substantial; has large space under the arm for handling bulky goods, is finely japanned, and protected by a hard finish. Has so few bearings and friction points that it is easily oiled and kept clean.

NEEDLE BAR is round, with adjustable bearings polished and fitted, insuring great wear, and can run a long time without oiling. It has a slack dip motion, relieving the strain upon the thread when the shuttle is passing through the loop. Using the adjustable take-up, controlling the threads perfectly on all grades of work.

IMPROVED AUTOMATIC BOBBIN WINDER which is so positive and reliable in its action that an imperfectly wound bobbin is an impossibility. So simple that a child can easily operate it. This valuable attachment renders possible a perfect control of shuttle tension.

SELF-THREADING—THE "ARLINGTON B" is self-threading, requiring no change from light to heavy work. Uses double thread, and makes the lock stitch.

THE NEEDLE is the same as used on the New Home machine, and is self-setting both as to height and position with reference to shuttle, with short blade and long shank, insuring great strength; finely polished.

SELF-THREADING SHUTTLE—A perfect steel cylinder shuttle with delicate and perfect tension, open at one end to allow the bobbin to be inserted without displacing any of the parts; runs loose in the shell without spring centre or point bearings, thus insuring an even tension; can be threaded in the dark, and easily understood.

LOOSE PULLEY for winding the bobbin without running the machine requires no change or adjustment, nor is it necessary to remove the work from the machine.

PARTS SUBJECT TO WEAR are made of the finest steel, case hardened, light and noiseless and are very durable.

OUR OFFER.

To anyone, not now a subscriber to this paper, who will send us $20.50, we will send the machine and the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE one year. To old subscribers we make the following offer: Pay your subscription to April, '98, and send us $18.50 additional, and we will send you the machine.

We allow purchaser to test the machine for ten days. If at the end of ten days you are not satisfied, you have only to drop us a postal card, and your money will be refunded.

TO AGENTS:

We will send this machine free to any preacher or other person who will send us twenty new subscribers with the cash—$40.

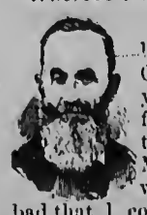
"Whereas I was deaf, now I hear."



At the age of 69, after having suffered from Catarrhal Deafness 20 years, am truly thankful to state that I am entirely cured by Aerial Medication; my hearing, which had become so bad that I could not hear a watch tick, or conversation, is fully restored. I will verify this statement.

Deaf Forty Years.

Am 58 years old, had catarrh in a very bad form 40 years, which greatly affected my eyes, almost entirely destroyed my hearing, was confined to the house a great portion of the time, and coughed almost continually. Used Aerial Medication in '94, which fully restored my hearing; my eyes are well and I am entirely cured of catarrh; can work and feel better than I have for forty years. JOHN GARRIS, Flatbrookville, N. J.

I had catarrh 21 years, was deaf eighteen years, could not hear common conversation, had roaring in ears, dreadful headaches, green offensive discharge, bad taste in mouth, and eyes so weak I could not see to read. I used Aerial Medication in '92; it stopped the roaring and discharge from my head, fully restored by hearing and for over four years my hearing has been perfect and am entirely free from Catarrh.

What shall I do with all the days and hours
That must be counted ere I see thy face?
How shall I charm the interval that lowers
Between this time and that sweet time of grace?

Shall I in slumber steep each weary sense—
Weary with longing? Shall I flee away
Into past days, and with some fond pretense
Cheat myself to forget the present day?

Shall love for thee lay on my soul the sin
Of casting from me God's great gift of time?
Shall I these mists of memory locked within,
Leave and forget life's purposes sublime?

Oh, how, or by what means, may I contrive
To bring the hour that brings thee back more near?
How may I lesson my drooping hope to live
Until that blessed time, and thou art here?

I'll tell thee; for thy sake I will lay hold
Of all good aims, and consecrate to thee,
In worthy deeds, each moment that is told
While thou, beloved one, art far from me.

For thee I will arouse my thoughts to try
All heavenward flights, all high and holy strains;
For thy dear sake I will walk patiently
Through these long hours, nor call their minutes pains.

I will this dreary blank of absence make
A noble task-time; and will therein strive
To follow excellence, and to overtake
More good than I have won since yet I live.

So may this doomed time build up in me
A thousand graces, which shall thus be thine;
So may my love and longing hallowed be,
And thy dear thought an influence divine.

He Who Would Please All Will Lose His Donkey and Be Laughed at for His Pains.

An old man and his young son were driving an ass before them to the next market to sell. "Why have you no more wit," says one to the man upon the way, "than you and your son to trudge it afoot and let the ass go light?" So the old man set his son upon the ass, and footed it himself. "Why, sirrah," says another after this, to the boy, "ye lazy rogue, you; must you ride and let your old father go afoot?" The old man upon this took down his son and got up himself. "Do you see," says a third, "how the lazy old knave rides himself, and the poor young fellow has much ado to creep after him?" The father, upon this, took up his son behind him. The next they met asked the old man if the ass were his own or no. He said, "Yes." "Troth, there's little sign on't," says the other, "by your loading him thus." "Well," says the old man to himself, "and what am I to do now? For I am laughed at if either the ass be empty, or if one of us rides, or both;" and so he came to the conclusion to bind the ass' legs together with a cord, and they tried to carry him to market with a pole upon their shoulders, betwixt them. This was great sport to everybody that saw it, inasmuch that the old man in great wrath threw down the ass into a river, and so went his way home again. The good man, in fine, was willing to please everybody, but had the ill-fortune to please nobody, and lost his ass into the bargain.

He who will not go to bed till he pleases everybody will have to sit up a great many nights. Many men, many minds; many women, many whims; and so if we please one we are sure to set another grumbling. We had better wait till they are all of one mind before we mind them, or we shall be like the man who hunted many hares at once and caught none. Besides, the fancies of men alter, and folly is never long pleased with the same thing, but changes its palate, and grows sick of what it doted on. Will Shepherd says he once tried to serve two masters, but, says he, "I soon had enough of it, and I declared that, if I was pardoned this once, the next time they caught me at it they might pickle me in salt and souse me in boiling vingar."

"He who would general favor win,
And not himself offend,
To-day the task he may begin,
He'll never, never end."

If we dance to every fiddle, we shall soon be lame in both legs. Good nature may be a great misfortune if we do not mix prudence with it.

He that all men would please
Shall never find ease.

It is right to be obliging, but we are not obliged to be every man's lackey. Put your hand quickly to your hat, for that is courtesy; but don't bow your head at every man's hicking, for that is slavery. He who hopes to please all should first fit the moon with a suit of clothes, or fill a bottomless barrel with buckets with their hoops off. To live upon the praises of others is to feed on air; for what is praise but the breath of men's nostrils? That's poor stuff to make a dinner of. To set traps for claps, and to faint if you don't get them, is a childish thing; and to change your coat to please new company is as mean as dirt. Change for the better as often as you like, but mind it is better before you change. Tom of Bedlam never did a madder thing than he who tried to please a thousand masters at once; one is quite enough. If a man pleases God he may let the world wag its own way, and frown or flatter, as the maggot hites. What is there, after all, to frighten a man in a fool's grin, or in the frown of a poor mortal like yourself? If it mattered at all what the world says of us, it would be some comfort that when a good man is buried people say, "He was not a bad fellow after all." When the cow is dead we hear how much milk she gave. When the man's gone to heaven folks know their loss, and wonder how it was they did not treat him better.

The way of pleasing men is hard, but blessed are they who please God. He is not a free man who is afraid to think for himself, for if his thoughts are in bonds the man is not free. A man of God is a manly man. A true man does what he thinks to be right, whether the pigs grunt or the dogs howl. Are you afraid to follow out your conscience because Tom, Jack and Harry, or Mary Ann and Betsy would laugh at you? Then you are not the seventy-fifth cousin to John Ploughman, who goes on his way whistling merrily, though many find fault with himself, and his plow, and his horses, and his harness, and his boots, and his coat, and his waistcoat, and his hat, and his head, and every hair on it. John says it amuses them and doesn't hurt him; but depend on it, you will never catch John or his boys carrying the donkey.—Spurgeon.

Worry—Is It Curable?

The word "worry" is not of classical origin. It is not a Latin or Greek word, but probably Saxon or old English. It originally meant to seize by the throat and strangle, as when a dog seizes a sheep, or even a rat. The dog worries these animals to death. The name wolf was given to the creature because it always worries its prey, torments it, tires it out. Warga, the old name of wolf, meant a strangler or one who worried its prey to death. The cat worries the mouse. Anything that worries produces unpleasant emotions, and these prevent the healthy action of both body and brain.

In modern times the wolves and the dogs which worry us are not real wolves and real dogs, but the small cares and troubles which keep us anxious and uneasy. They do not strangle us to death, but they strangle our better selves and often reduce the value of our lives to a minimum. There is a book in my library by Dr. Beaumont, who studied the digestive processes of a patient who had an opening into his stomach so he could see the operation of digestion. In it is a statement to the effect that when this patient was worried or angry digestion was slow and imperfectly performed. The stomach was worried as well as the brain. The action of sorrow, anxiety and worry is to derange and obstruct the whole of this beautiful and important process. You might as well attempt to build a house of cubes of soft, moist clay, as to construct, or rather reconstruct, the human body with undigested food. Dyspepsia is a disease whose pains are relentless and unmanning and whose consequences are grievous to be borne. In most cases, consumption, cancer of the stomach, ulcer of the stomach, an (in infante) rickets, scrofula and general wasting are preceded by dyspeptic conditions.

Can women who have more little cares and trials than men do go through life without worry? Not unless they take charge of their own feelings and keep them in their proper place. Then they can. It is simply a matter of self-government and self-control. Self-control is one of the more recent acquirements of the race, and is not yet so fully developed as it will be some day; but even now many can control themselves if they will. It is a matter of will, and women, it is said, are not lacking in this respect.

One of the rarities of our age is a woman who is happy. The happiest people are generally those who, while cultivating habits of prudence and forethought, desiring only a comfortable independence, are indifferent to the accumulation of great wealth, and addicted to simple pleasure and home entertainments; who cherish a wholesome aversion to ostentatious hospitality and ceremonious display; who select their friends on account of their sterling character, and never think of inquiring how much they are worth.

We meet with such now and then, who at eighty retain something of their youthful freshness of feeling and warmth of heart, but not many.

On the other hand, many a woman whose energies are concentrated upon social distinction breaks down and drops into the grave before she has reached the grand dimacteric.

If there was a wolf constantly following any of us to worry out our lives, would we not at once try and have it destroyed? The same course should be pursued with regard to the many little wolves, the cares and trials of life which strangle our happiness and destroy our health.—The Journal of Hygiene.

Stonewall Jackson.

His pastor once called upon Stonewall Jackson to pray in public. He did so, but with such confusion of utterance that the pastor told him that he would never require it of him again. Jackson replied that he did not wish to be excused from the duty. It was a cross to him to pray in public, but he had made up his mind to bear it. He persevered and became fluent in speech.

His pastor once remarked that "in our country the man who can speak multiplies himself by five." The remark so impressed Jackson that he resolved to become a speaker, though he was nervous and diffident. He formed a debating society, and after many efforts became an impressive, though never an eloquent, speaker.

Commenting on this contest with self, begun in childhood and never given up, General Hill says:

"This self-denial and self-control explain his wonderful success. He had conquered himself, and was thus made fit to be a conqueror. No self-indulgent man was ever truly great, however lavishly nature may have showered upon him her bounties. How many splendid opportunities have been lost through the wine-bibbing or pleasure-seeking of some officer of rank! Every page of history points to such instances, and the experience of every man in his own life confirms the lesson."—Selected.

There are times for everyone when an outing does more to counteract feelings of fatigue than it is possible for a day's time nap to do. Often has it occurred that a woman who thought herself too tired to do anything but lie down and sleep has found herself greatly refreshed by the walk, drive or visit which she has been induced to take or to make. Though on some occasions sleep is the one thing most needed—and happy the woman who has the faculty of snatching a few moments of such rest between duties—on others it is fresh air for which the system is suffering. There is a wonderful power of reinvigoration for both mind and body in the sunshine, and the woman who unnecessarily spends many entire days in the house may not be doing the best for herself.

Thank God every morning when you get up that you have something to do that day which must be done, whether you like it or not. Being forced to work and forced to do your best will breed in your temperance, self-control, diligence, strength of will, content, and a hundred virtues which the idle will never know.—Selected.

40 YEARS THE STANDARD.

What She Needs.

In a recent number of The Young Woman, Andeline Sergeant has a message for a "girl who feels restless." She says:

"Remember that without God, and the love of God, there is no satisfaction in the world. If you are neglecting or disobeying him, you are out of harmony with all the laws of the universe. You are out of touch with the highest. And the nobler your nature, the more miserable you will be. Without this key, life is a riddle; without this hope, the world is a failure; your friends will give you no satisfaction, your very love will be your misery. What do you want in your life for happiness, do you think? Success, pleasure, wisdom, riches, love? Ah, no! You want God. Then all the rest may go; as for you, your heart is fixed."

"Look on the bright side," said a young man to a friend, who was discontented and melancholy. "But there is no bright side," was his doleful reply. "Very well—then polish up the dark one," said the young man promptly. Are you ever despondent? Then adopt this advice, and remember that the best way to "polish up the dark side" is to work—work hard, and with ceaseless devotion and energy.

HYGIENE

Presence of Mind and Health.

A diplomatist once declared that among all the remarkable men with whom he had been acquainted, he never knew more than one or two who had presence of mind. We would not question this assertion if we realized the essential qualities which "presence of mind" implies. Panic is the temporary suspension or paralysis of the reasoning faculties and the judgment. Pan, being once in command of an army, according to Greek mythology, and encompassed by a superior force, ordered his men to raise a general shout in the night, which so surprised the enemy that they fled from camp, "whence it came that all sudden fears impressed upon men's spirits without any just reason were called by the Greeks 'Panick terrours.'" Presence of mind is the maintenance of judgment under circumstances of emergency which call for immediate action. That the faculty of doing the right thing at the right moment may be called constitutional courage, and is shown by its occasional manifestation by those in whom the latter quality is largely tempered with discretion. The truest courage is always mixed with circumspection, the courage which grows simply from constitution often forsakes us just at the moment when we have occasion for it. Napoleon refers to this distinction when he says: "I have rarely met with the 2 o'clock-in-the-morning courage. I mean unprepared courage; that which is necessary on an unexpected occasion, and which in spite of the most unforeseen events leaves full freedom of judgment and decision."

Presence of mind illuminates a catastrophe or a panic. The phrases, "having your wits about you" and "not losing your head," are the ordinary vernacular equivalents for presence of mind. There is an old tradition which recounts how when William the Conquerer landed for the first time on English soil, he slipped and fell on his face. Divining by some swift intuition that his followers might regard this as an ill omen, he rose with each hand full of earth, and exclaimed: "Thus do I take possession of England! I grasp it with both hands." To this readiness the quality of wit can hardly be denied; and it may also be regarded as one of the typical instances of presence of mind.

As a final word it may be said that presence of mind depends on training for emergencies, on acquired courage, on a good circulation of the blood in the brain and on good health. It sometimes happens that an invalid has great presence of mind in a moment of danger. It probably comes from an uprush of the subliminal self which may have greater power than the self we know. It probably knows no fear and how to act on most occasions. Some forms of invalidism bring the subliminal self to the front and then we have exhibitions of power of a remarkable kind.—The Journal of Hygiene.

Dr. J. J. Lyons.

"Doctor J. J. Lyons is dead!" This was the exclamation that smote my ear as I lay upon a bed of sickness, and the announcement was overheard by me; made to a stranger in this city by a poor woman in the lowly walks of life. "A very charitable man!" was the next exclamation of this woman, pitched in a key of sadness, as of a personal bereavement.

What an index to this good man's life was this latter remark! His career in this city is packed and crammed with beneficence. I can not but think how one may apply to him Job's self-commendation: "When the ear heard me, then it blessed me; and when the eye saw me, it gave witness to me: because I delivered the poor that cried, and the fatherless, and him that had none to help him. The blessing of him that was ready to perish came upon me: and I caused the widow's heart to sing for joy. I was eyes to the blind, and feet was I to the lame. I was a father to the poor."

His life is full of sweet records in the memories of men; but how much grander a record of him has God in his Book of Remembrance, where many a deed unknown to man is indelibly engraven! I dare not touch, with an attempt at estimate, his high professional standing. That is for higher discernment than mine.

Doctor Lyons "stood four-square to the world." He fronted mankind as a citizen, as a professional man, as a benefactor and philanthropist, as a Christian.

As a citizen, or man of affairs, he was strong in his convictions, and intrepid on their avowal.

As a Christian, his life was busy in work, in and out of the church. He enjoyed and adorned his official positions. He was gifted and inspiring in religious sociality. His spirituality was rich and invigorating, and his gift of prayer was full of unction, with the ear-charm of deep-throated and stirring intonation.

It was really inspiriting to meet Doctor Lyons, even by mere chance, such was the spell of his geniality and urbanity. His address was striking for its ease and grace, with a charm of cheeriness and spontaneity utterly unforced, unconventional, and free from taint of routine and shallowness. His social contact came upon one with a beauty and fragrance of manner, as of a full-blown rose.

We, who are well way on life's journey, know there are no irreparable losses, because God's bounty and goodness fill all the great voids the departure of good and great men seem to make. But the death of no one in this city would strike with a deeper and more benumbing chill the stricken heart of man than that which now depresses in the death of Doctor Lyons.

From thousands of Christian hearts have gone up prayers of pity for, and sympathy with, his bereaved family. In many an eye the unwonted tear has welled in like behalf; and lips that never framed a prayer have been taught by their love and gratitude for their departed benefactor to bless his memory and beg God's blessings on his stricken loved ones

OBITUARIES.

OVERSTREET—Dr H. CLAY OVERSTREET, son of J. H. and Mary L. Overstreet, was born Feb. 5, 1869, and died at his home at Moscow, Miss., Oct. 10, 1896.

He graduated at the A. and M. College, of Mississippi, in 1891, and soon after entered the Louisville Medical College, where he graduated in March of 1893. He began the practice of medicine at Macon, Miss., where he remained about two years, during which time he was happily married to Miss Sophia Elizabeth Prince, daughter of Dr. Prince, of Summerville, Miss. About eighteen months ago he came back to his native county (Kemper), located at Moscow, and at once entered a very large and lucrative practice.

It would be hard to estimate the loss to Kemper county and the medical profession sustained in the death of this young man. A perfect specimen of physical manhood, full of energy and ambition, with a nature sympathetic and sunny, and a mind practical, clear, and vigorous, he was well fitted for the profession he had chosen. His unfaltering devotion to his patients is largely responsible for his death. He lost his life trying to save others.

As a citizen, he was set for his country's good. As a friend and a neighbor, he was thoughtful and true, and his friendship was of the purest kind—unstained by selfish aims and purposes.

He was converted and joined the Methodist Church in October, 1891, and has been true to his vows. His professional life kept him from being a regular attendant at church, but he improved other means of grace.

The best index to his true character is found in his devotion to his parents. It was the great ambition of his life to repay his parents for all the toil and care given him. His mother says he never gave her one hour's trouble in all his life.

A true and noble young man is gone. May his mantle fall on some one else!

GEO. H. THOMPSON.

DeKalb, Miss.

WRIGHT—A long life, beautiful in its self-sacrifice and devoted to the happiness of others, has ended.

Mrs. MARY CATHERINE WRIGHT, wife of the late James Wright, of Tate county, and eldest daughter of Arthur McMurray Bowen and Catherine Dent Poston Bowen, after a long, useful and happy life, died at the home of her son, Mr. Wm. H. Wright, at Palestine, Miss., Sept. 21, 1896. Although seventy-four years old and feeble with the weakness of age, her smiles were the sunshine of children and grandchildren. All who came within reach of her gentle presence felt the influence of her bright and cheerful life.

Mrs. Wright was born near Marion, Smythe county, Va. When yet a little girl her parents removed to North Mississippi, and settled near Chulahoma, Marshall county. In 1845 she was married to James Wright, and spent the rest of her life in Tate county.

She leaves five children, who will miss her from their home circles: Mr. John H. Wright, of Clarksdale, Miss.; Mr. W. H. Wright, of Palestine, Miss.; Mrs. R. O. Mosby, of Coldwater, Miss.; Mrs. J. R. Cook, of Memphis, Tenn.; and Mrs. H. A. Martin, of Fayetteville, Ark.

She was a consistent member of the M. E. Church, South, for over fifty years. "Our loss is her eternal gain." O. L. SAVAGE.

Cockrum, Miss.

HARRIS—EDMOND P. HARRIS was born in Georgia, March 14, 1819, and died near St. Maurice, La., Oct. 1, 1896.

I know none of the particulars of Bro. Harris' death, but I know his life was right, for a purer, nobler man I never knew. Early in life he professed religion and joined the M. E. Church, and remained a faithful and acceptable member thereof till "God took him up higher."

Bro. Harris was twice married—the second time to Miss Martha Mays, who, for many years, was a kind and affectionate wife, and nursed him faithfully in his long and sore affliction, and who still survives him, and by God's grace will meet him in heaven.

Years ago I was the pastor of Bro. and Sister Harris, and can safely say that no preacher ever ministered to a more faithful couple.

Bro. Harris measured up to the full stature of a true Christian man in every sense of the word, and is now enjoying the Christian's eternal reward. I loved him as I have loved few men, and expect to see him again.

May the benedictions of our heavenly Father rest upon the bereaved and lonely one!

BOYDSTUN—ROBERT WILSON BOYDSTUN, son of Rev. John P. Boydstun, was born in Izzard county, Ark., May 26, 1833. In his youth he made a profession of religion and joined the Methodist Church. On the fourteenth of February, 1866, he was united in marriage to Miss R. C. Miller, sister of the writer of this notice, in Lafayette county, Miss. Nine children were given to them. Two preceded the father to the spirit world. He was a devoted father and husband, a faithful Christian; was for many years an official member of the church, occupying the position of class leader, steward, and Sunday-school superintendent. He did good missionary work in organizing and conducting Sunday-schools in destitute places, forming the nucleus of regular preaching and organization of good churches.

His death occurred on the seventeenth of September, 1896, at his home on Cane river, parish of Natchitoches, La. God bless his bereaved family! JNO. A. MILLER.

Roston, La.

ROGILLIO—MILDRED ROGILLIO was born in West Feliciana parish, May 16, 1871, and died Sept. 9, 1896.

From her childhood she was so earnest follower of the Lord Jesus Christ. For a number of years she had been a consistent member of the Methodist Church. For many long months she was confined to her bed, but amid all of her sickness and suffering she was patient, uncomplaining, and submissive. Her last words were, "There is nothing between me and my God." Her mother and friends mourn not "as those who have no hope," but expect to meet her after awhile where suffering is known no more.

Something Good in Dixie

Please understand I am a woman of Indiana, not of Dixie, but do appreciate this good; delight to acknowledge it that all persons afflicted as I have been may know there is hope and happiness for them. I had been a stammerer from childhood; sometimes as unable to speak as though dumb. Had tried several cures, but all of them failed. Then, as a last resort, I tried Rev. G. W. Randolph's Cure for Stuttering or Stammering, and now am CURED. Four days after complying with the requirements of this Cure, I received by mail that which enabled me to talk with such ease and infinite satisfaction, which, to one who endures the affliction as long and severely as I have is a "veritable gladness in the soul." I have never seen Rev. Randolph, but have found him to be a man of his word, and is highly recommended in church circles, also by State officials. His Vocal School, or Institute, is located at No. 468 Poplar Street, Memphis, Tenn., and to persons going to this school a cure is GUARANTEED. The Cure by mail gives the same happy results. If instructions are carefully followed, which even children can do, and those needing the benefit of this GOOD will find him so considerate in his terms they need not suffer these afflictions longer, Submitted for the sake of the unfortunate.

The Holman Self-Pronouncing S. S. Teachers' Bible

Divinity Circuit, Round Corners, etc.

CONTAINS THE FOLLOWING HELPS TO THE STUDY OF THE BIBLE.

Concordance, with Contexts, over 40,000 References; Index to Persons, Places and Subjects, 16,000 References; Scripture Atlas, with Index; Glossary of Bible Words; Bible Calendar; Summary and Analyses of the Old and New Testaments.

A Self-Pronouncing Dictionary of Proper Names and Foreign Words contained in the Bible, comprising about 3,500 words, giving the pronunciation, the meaning, and the location of the text where the word occurs for the first time.

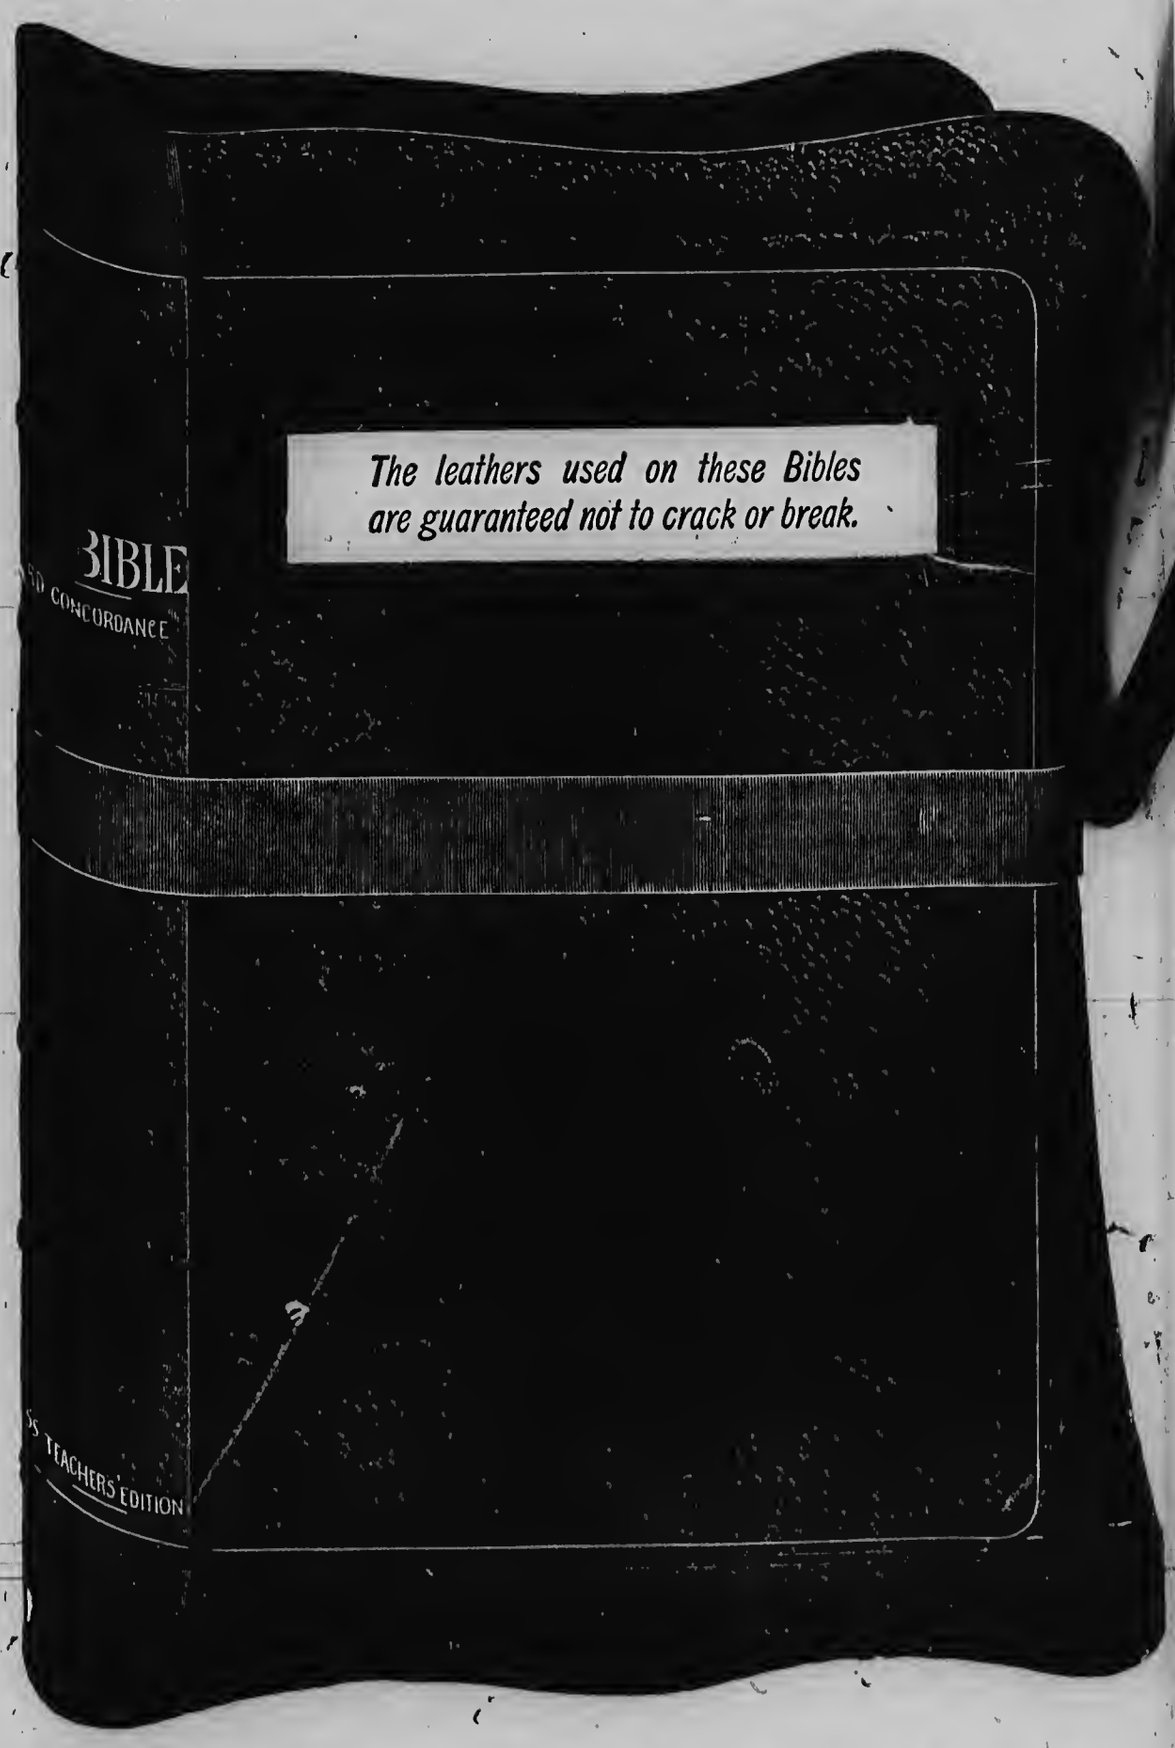
Exhaustive Articles on Biblical History, Geography, Topography, Natural History, Ethnology, Botany, Chronology, Music and Poetry; a Complete Harmony of the Gospels, Tables of Parables, Miracles, Prophecies, Prayers, Money, Weights and Measures, Jewish Sects and Orders, etc.

TWELVE FULL-PAGE MAPS IN COLORS.

Every proper name in the text is syllabified and accented, and has the vowels marked according to the most authoritative modern standards of pronunciation. The text is in exact conformity with that of the world-famous Oxford S. S. Teacher's Bible. All the valuable "Helps to the Study of the Bible" contained in the Oxford Bible are retained.

The only Teacher's Bible with a self-pronouncing text. No similar Bible was ever obtainable heretofore; in fact, no publishers ever attempted its publication.

"The essence of fifty expensive volumes, by men of sacred learning, is condensed in these 'Helps.'"



The large-type (Bourgeois) edition sells to persons who are not subscribers for $5. Our subscribers get it, on conditions specified below, for $2 35. The same Bible in Minion type, which is somewhat smaller than Bourgeois, we offer to our subscribers, on conditions named below, for $1.55. To those who are not subscribers we sell it at $3 15. We also handle an edition in still smaller type (Emerald). Our subscribers get this for $1.15.

In order to get anyone of these at these rates it is necessary to pay your subscription one year in advance, viz., to November, '97. (A little later it will be December, '97.)

For twenty cents we will have your name engraved in gilt letters on the outside of the book.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

Hon. T. E. Cooper, Chief Justice of Mississippi, has resigned, his resignation to take effect Dec. 1. He will remove at that date to Memphis to practice his profession.

A movement is on foot in New York to advocate the passage of a "curfew" ordinance. The proposed ordinance will be presented to the Board of Aldermen some time during this Winter.

Alabama and Georgia will be represented by new men in the United States Senate. Senator Pugh's seat will be filled by Gen. E. W. Pettus, while Gen. J. B. Gordon will be succeeded by Hon. Alexander Stephens Clay.

Governor Mitchell, of Florida, has issued invitations to the governors of the various States, asking them to send representatives to a convention to meet at Tampa, on Jan. 20, 1897. The object of this convention, as stated in the circular letter, "is to discuss methods for the proper defense of Southern harbors."

One of the significant facts of the day is that Booker T. Washington, of the Tuskegee Institute, delivered an address the other day before the faculty and students of Trinity College, Durham, N. C. This is the first instance on record of a Southern white college inviting a negro to deliver an address.

At the beginning of the week the turning of a switch in the big power-house at Niagara Falls completed a circuit which caused Niagara river to flow up hill, so to speak, by returning a fraction of its resistless energy, which had already swept past the gates of Buffalo, back into that city, 27 miles distant. The harness was buckled that binds the factory wheels of Buffalo to the greatest cataract on earth. The street cars of that city will move by falls power.

The Mississippi River Commission has arrived in this city, and have set out for the month of the river with the United States Advisory Board of Engineers on Fortifications as their guests. The former party will inspect the rest of the river from here to the jetties, and as the president of the commission happens to be a member of the Board of Fortifications the opportunity is seized upon to utilize the trip for two purposes, inspecting the river and discussing the work of fortification as it concerns the great Mississippi valley, or the inlet to it, the month of the Mississippi river.

FOREIGN.

The International Industrial Exhibition at Berlin, which has just been brought to a close, seems to have proved a dead failure. There is a deficit of over 1,000,000 marks, which will have to be covered by the guarantors.

The vigorous efforts now being made to conquer the Cubans are attributed to a fear by the Spanish government that unless decisive results are reached before the new administration comes in, the United States may adopt a more unfriendly policy and interfere in Cuban affairs.

The session of the German Reichstag, or Imperial Parliament, which opened last week, promises to be a stormy one. It is understood that the government is to be questioned as to the Bismarck disclosures in connection with the secret treaty with Russia, and it is also understood that the government is to be interpolated on the subject of the recent military scandals.

The powers of Europe have not been slow to understand the meaning and significance of the acquiescence by Great Britain in the demand made by the United States that the Venezuelan incident be submitted to arbitration. They realize that Great Britain has formally recognized the existence of the Monroe doctrine, and has accepted its provisions as the new rule in regulating international affairs where the Western Hemisphere is concerned.

Prayer Meeting Topic for November.

CHRIST'S TESTIMONIES.

SUNDAY, NOV. 22—TO HIS DISCIPLES.

(John xiv, 14; xx, 21.)

The testimony of Christ in this topic was given primarily to the circle of apostles, but has application also to all Christian disciples.

I.—THE DISCIPLES' PRIVILEGE OF PRAYER.

No small part of Christ's message of comfort to his disciples, on the eve of his departure from them, was that, though he should be absent, he would nevertheless hear and answer their prayers. "If ye shall ask anything in my name, I will do it." This is not an absolute promise to grant every request that is asked of God by Christian people, for the promise is limited by the condition of asking in Christ's name, and this means a great deal more than mere utterance of speech. "To ask in the name of Christ is to ask in complete identification with him, as inspired by his spirit and as incorporated into his body. Such asking is in the interest of his kingdom, and is identified with his will. Such prayer is ever answered." (Whedon.) This is not an undue narrowing down of the meaning of the promise, but it contemplates prayer as the most gracious privilege of approach to God through Christ, with the confidence that the petition will be heard by a heavenly Father, whose infinite love and wisdom are in continual exercise to answer prayer in the best possible way.

II.—THE DISCIPLES' COMMISSION.

Christ was commissioned of the Father, and the apostles were commissioned or sent forth by Christ. The word "apostle" means one "sent forth." Our reference is to the meeting of Christ with the apostles in a body for the first time after his resurrection. Here he utters a benediction of peace upon them, commissions them to go forth as his representatives, and imparts to them the presence of the Holy Spirit. A little later, immediately before his ascension from the mountain, he gives them a final commission, and instructs them to remain in Jerusalem for a fuller bestowment of the Holy Ghost, which should be their gratification for fulfilling the terms of the commission. All Christ's disciples are commissioned or set forth as living witnesses to him, and all need to look to him for the necessary enduement of power.

A Recent Review

WITH DR. HARTMAN, THE RENOWNED CATARRH SPECIALIST.

A newspaper contributor was lately admitted into the extensive suit of offices which constitute the headquarters of Dr. Hartman, who treats catarrh patients by the thousand. Amid the busy swarm of assistant doctors, clerks, stenographers and bookkeepers, Dr. Hartman stopped long enough to say a few words:

"The number of catarrh patients who visit me is large, but the number who are entered on my books as regular patients (but are treated without charge, by correspondence), is very much larger. Hundreds of letters are received and answered free every day. A yet greater multitude take my catarrh remedy, Pe-ru-na, and are cured, of whom I never hear. Some of this latter class write me years after their cure. I never allow a name published except by the written consent of the patient. We make no charge at any time. The medicine only is obtained by each patient at his own drug store. Those desiring to become regular patients have only to send address, duration of disease and treatment previously received, and directions for first month's treatment will be sent at once.

"Over half the people have catarrh in some form or another. And yet probably not a tenth of the people know that their disease is catarrh. To distinguish catarrh of various organs, it has been named very differently. One person has dyspepsia; another bronchitis; another Bright's Disease; another liver complaint; another consumption; another female complaint. These people would be very much surprised to hear that they are all suffering with chronic catarrh. But it is so, nevertheless. Each one of these troubles, and a great many more, are simply catarrh—that is, chronic inflammation of the mucous lining of whichever organ is affected. Any internal remedy that will cure catarrh in one location will cure it in any other location. This is why Pe-ru-na has become so justly famous in the cure of catarrhal diseases. It cures catarrh wherever located. Its cures remain. Pe-ru-na does not palliate; it cures."

A catarrh book is sent free by The Pe-ru-na Drug Manufacturing Company, Columbus, Ohio. This book contains 64 pages of reading matter and instructive illustrations.

Dr. Bouffe, an eminent member of the Academy of Science in Paris, announces his success in curing severe cases of leprosy. He began by undertaking to modify the condition of the nervous system by invigorating without exciting it. Through a new technical process he studied the condition of the blood in leprous patients, and succeeded in demonstrating the presence of bacilli of leprosy, which had hitherto been discovered only in leprous tubercles. Not less than a hundred of these pitiable creatures are at large among the poor of Paris, affording the scientific expert a fair opportunity to try the virtue of his new method. Time will test its value.—Zion's Herald.

A Christmas Trip.

The thousands of Texans who came from the South Atlantic States find much pleasure in reverting to the happy days of long ago when they were children, and often they awake at night to recall those scenes of yore which gave to life a charm, and which now come in later years as visions of joy. There is a tender spot in every heart for the old home, and the memories which cluster about the dear old spot are solaces in the weary, weary struggle we make day by day to build in our new Eldorado a home to which our children in future time will turn, as we turn now to the old place where our loved ones in the evening of life await the final summons.

The Texas and Pacific Railway Company again offers you the opportunity to go "back to the old home." Round-trip excursion tickets will be on sale from all points on the system on Dec. 21 and 22, 1896, to points in the Southeastern States, at one fare for the round trip, tickets good 30 days from date of sale. See your nearest ticket agent for further information, and do not fail to send eight cents postage to the undersigned for a copy of the finest publication on Texas ever issued, to show to your friends at home.

Notice.

To the Delinquent Members of the Ministers' Education Aid Association of the Louisiana Conference:

If it has been hitherto impossible for you to pay the amount of your annual dues, I urge you to make an earnest effort to send the money at once, and, if you can not do this, please have the money ready to pay to me at the approaching Annual Conference in Ruston.

The revised Constitution makes it the duty of the secretary to receive the membership dues, and not the treasurer.

The money is very much needed to meet our obligations to the young men who are our beneficiaries at Centenary College.

THE PAUPER'S DRIVE.

BY THOMAS NOEL.

There's a grim one-horse hearse in a jolly round trot—
To the churchyard a panper is going, I wot;
The road, it is rough, and the hearse has no springs,
And bark to the dirge which the mad driver sings:
Rattle his bones over the stones!
He's only a panper, whom nobody owns!

Oh, where are the mourners?
Alas! there are none—
He has left not a gap in the world, now he's gone—
Not a tear in the eye of child, woman, or man;
To the grave with his carcase as fast as yon can:
Rattle his bones over the stones!
He's only a panpar, whom nobody owns!

What a jolting and creaking and splashing and din!
The whip, how it cracks! and the wheels, how they spin!
Rattle his bones over the stones!
He's only a panper, whom nobody owns!

Poor panper defunct! he has made some approach
To gentility, now that he's stretched in a coach!
He's taking a drive in his carriage at last;
But it will not be long, if he goes on so fast.
Rattle his bones over the stones!
He's only a panper, whom nobody owns!

You bumpkins, who stare at your brother conveyed,
Behold what respect to a clodly is paid!
And be joyful to think,
Where by death you're laid low,
You've a chance to the grave like a gentman to go!
Rattle his bones over the stones!
He's only a panper, whom nobody owns!

But a truce to this strain, for my soul it is sad,
To think that a heart in humanity clad,
Should make, like the brutes, such a desolate end,
And depart from the light without leaving a friend!
Bear soft his bones over the stones!

Around the Mediterranean.

BY DORA M. JONES.

I.—ACROSS THE BAY TO LISBON.

SS. "Midnight Sun."

I suppose no set of people ever went to sea more plentifully provided with the commodity known as Job's comfort than the party whose adventures I am about to chronicle. We were bound for the Mediterranean, and many were the dark presages as to our fate. Perhaps some people may remember the gales that immediately preceded the twenty-ninth of September, and while oaks were bending and tiles flying in every direction, and news of casualties by land and sea coming in by every post, it did seem somewhat foolhardy to brave the rage of the Atlantic. Even when on the morning of our departure the sun shone out on us encouragingly for the first time for many days, our prudent friends shook their heads at us in pity, and observed, "Ah, you just wait till you get into the Bay."

In spite of all, however, our spirits, which had been somewhat damped by these remonstrances, rose insensibly as, after forcing our way through the crowd of people at St. Pancras station who had come to speed the travelers, and securing seats in the special train which had been chartered to take the party down to Tilbury, we found ourselves speeding through the Essex flats, with their rows of pollarded willows, and red sails apparently rising out of the fields, though, as we came nearer, we saw the river creeping between the low banks. In about an hour we reached Tilbury station, and had the pleasure of perceiving the long black side of the steamship "Midnight Sun," which was to be our floating home for so long, rising along the quay-side. There was the usual excitement incident to the departure of one hundred and sixty Britons, with impedimenta, from their native shores. In the midst of all this the stewards contrived to let us have some dinner, and after that the best thing to be done seemed to be to climb to the hurricane deck and sit there in the lee of one of the boats in the dark, admiring the harbor lights till the time came to go below and make acquaintance with one's snug little white-painted cabin.

After a sleep, which not even the unaccustomed noises of a first night at sea could disturb, I was roused about half-past six by the arrival of the matutinal tea and biscuits. After breakfast the deck chairs drew into groups under the awnings, old traveling companions met again and recalled their past adventures, and neighbors at table or in cabins improved their acquaintance, and discussed the prospects of the voyage.

Most of us knew before we started on the cruise that Sir Lambert Playfair, who was returning to Algiers on the "Midnight Sun," would probably give us a lecture or two on board, and we were looking forward eagerly to the chance of getting some information on the countries we were to visit from one of the greatest living authorities on the history and antiquities of the Mediterranean coast. We were not disappointed. At five o'clock the large smoking-room on deck was packed full, and Sir Lambert was introduced to his audience by the Hon. Mr. Justice Ross. The lecturer dealt, in the first place, with the physical configuration of the Mediterranean, showing the strong similarity of flora, fauna, and general contour between the northern and southern shores of the great sea, and pointed out that the Mediterranean was once divided into an eastern and a western basin, separated by a barrier of land where is now the Island of Sicily. He then gave a sketch of the Mediterranean as a trade route, pointing out that the Roman domination had rather checked than otherwise the commerce developed by the Phœnicians. The Arab invasion and the Crusades developed a trade with the East, of which Venice was the chief emporium, and to which the discovery of the sea route to India round the Cape of Good Hope proved a death blow. The importance of the Mediterranean as a trade route was revived when Ferdinand de Lesseps engineered the Suez Canal, and the only thing that could threaten it in the future would be the outbreak of a European war, in which case England, "the carrier of the world," might be compelled to revert to the longer route. The lecturer also gave us some interesting particulars about the first person who held the consular office in England, and who was appointed to the consulate of Crete and Candia by Henry VIII. in 1522; also about his own predecessor, Tipton, the first consul of Algiers, who received his nomination in 1585. His authority was afterwards extended to Tunis and Tripoli.

We passed through the dreaded bay, which put on its best behavior for us. In the afternoon we ran into a shoal of porpoises, which kept up with the ship for some time, and created great amusement, leaping out of the water in pairs, like trained circus ponies. After dinner that evening our indefatigable committee had an entertainment ready for us, including an excellent conjuring performance by the doctor in charge.

The following day, about noon, we sighted Finisterre—low sandy hills, and then a line of purple cliffs running out to the headland and the lighthouse. As we drew nearer we could make out the burnt-up, barren look of the hills, and the strip of bright yellow sand running at the foot of the cliff. We were signaling to the lighthouse when the luncheon rang. When we came up again the coast of Spain was a pale cloud, low on the horizon; then it faded, and we were alone once more with the sea and the sky. That afternoon Sir Lambert Playfair lectured on the Punic Wars, the Empire of Rome in Africa, the early Christian Church, laying special emphasis on the great names of Augustine and Cyprian and the Vandal invasion.

Going on deck before breakfast next day, I found a crowd of passengers aft, with their eyes fixed on a faint, misty line of cliff on the left, which gradually took on distinctness, and assumed the outline of Lisbon Rock, crowned with its old castle. By and by we had the pleasure, which no one can appreciate who has not spent three days in open sea, of feasting our eyes on the details of the coast—red sandstone cliffs, with bare, reddish-brown hills above, shading into exquisite tints of palish purple; strips of yellow beach, white churches, red-roofed villas, and patches of bright green garden. By and by we rounded the point, and found ourselves steaming up the wide channel of the Tagus, with its smiling shores. Then the channel of the river widened into a spacious harbor, gay with various kinds of shipping—big steamers, an ocean tramp or two, weather-beaten and shabby, and any amount of small sailing craft, manned by bronze-colored sailors in blue cotton. The water was clear enough for us to see the jelly-fish as they floated past. In front of us was Lisbon, with its houses piled tier above tier to the summit of the amphitheatre of hills which surround the harbor, red and yellow warehouses lining the quay, white domes and cupolas, tufts of green trees and red-tiled houses, looking down on the harbor with its multitudinous shipping—all this bathed in a sunshine which made us realize that at last we were in the South.

Letter from "Gilderoy."

"Mr. Porter, tell me why men are sent to hell. I am not religious, and do not belong to the church, but I do not steal, nor tell lies, not even falsehoods. I do not swear, do not indulge in lascivious conversation, and I am not lewd. I pay my debts, and I am liberal to the church, the poor and needy, and I am a strictly moral man every way. I believe there is a God, and I believe there was such a man as Christ. I believe in a future state, and in rewards and punishments in the other world. I do not pray, and can not say that I love God and Christ in any special way. I do nothing to be sent to hell for, and I see no reason why I should go to that bad world you preachers talk so much about. Now, pray tell me why men are sent to hell."

Well, my dear sir, you are laboring under a great mistake, a delusion of the devil. Men are not sent to hell because they do not profess religion and do not join the church. They are not sent to hell for stealing, nor for telling lies or falsehoods. They do not have to go to hell for swearing, nor for lascivious talk, nor for lewd practices. They do not go to hell for the non-payment of debts, nor because they do not support the church, and are not kind to the poor and needy. Men are not sent to hell because they are immoral. They do not go to hell for any one or all of the things you name.

"Why, Mr. Porter, you surprise me, astonish me, confound me. I never heard a preacher talk so before in all my life. Then why do men go to hell? What are they sent there for?"

Well, my friend, there is only one single, solitary damning sin, and for that every human being goes to hell that goes there at all. That sin is a willful, persistent refusal to believe on the Lord Jesus Christ—to accept salvation through him. It does not matter how moral, upright, honest and liberal you are, if you refuse to believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, you are just as certain to go to hell as the worst man in all the land. "He that believeth not shall be damned," no matter how moral he may be. To accept Christ is to be saved; to reject him is to be damned. My friend, you are trusting yourself, your morality, your honesty, your liberality, and not Christ, for salvation. You mean to escape hell and get into heaven without Christ and without faith in his blood. "He that believeth not is condemned already, because he hath not believed in the name of the only begotten Son of God."

"Why, Mr. Porter, you do not mean to say that I am a bad man, do you?"

Oh, I have seen worse men; but, my dear sir, you are an unsaved man. The germ, or principle, of sin is in your heart, and you are out of Christ and out of harmony with God. You are in a state of sin, of rebellion against God. This is seen in your refusal to believe on his Son. As long as you do this, you are a sinner, and you are just as certain to go to hell as the man who swears, tells lies, and steals.

"Mr. Porter, you are hard on me. I flattered myself that I was a pretty good man, and that you thought well of me."

I do think well of you. You are a clever man. I am proud of all the good and noble traits in you. I am not hard on you. I am only honest with you, and that, too, for the good of your soul. I wish you had personal, saving faith in Christ; then you would not flatter yourself that you were so good, and yet, as a matter of fact, you would be far better than you are. My dear sir, "without faith it is impossible to please God." The lack of faith is the root of sin. From this root all the evils you try so hard to avoid spring. The root of sin is in you because you do not, and will not, accept salvation from it. Your life is right enough as far as it goes, but your heart is all wrong with God. The trouble is inside of you—"an evil heart of unbelief." This will ruin you forever.

"But, Mr. Porter, why do men and women go to heaven?"

For one reason, and one only—because they believe on the Lord Jesus Christ. "He that believeth shall be saved." Men do not go to heaven because they pray, read the Bible, go to church, pay the preacher, feed the widows, and live honest lives. These things are the fruits of faith, and are not the conditions of salvation. We do them because we believe, and not to merit or purchase salvation. Unbelievers think more highly of themselves and their good deeds than they ought to think. Believers think little of themselves and their good works. The holier men and women are, the less they have to say of themselves and what they have done. After they have done all the good they can, they say, "We are unprofitable servants, for we have only done our duty, and nothing more." There is one sin that damns men—unbelief. There is one virtue or grace that saves men—faith in the Son of God. The condition of damnation is unbelief, and the condition of salvation is faith. This, my friend, is as plain a statement as I know how to make, and I assure you it is in harmony with God's Holy Word.

The Religious Newspaper.

The influence of a good religious newspaper as a constant visitor in the family, we think, is greatly underrated. It is regular food for the mind, and is a constant invigorator of the family thinking. In a well-conducted religious newspaper there are many points discussed in brief articles, and much information communicated from sources to which few of the readers themselves have access. It may require only ten minutes to read and possess what it may have cost the writer half a day to produce. What an amount of labor is thus represented in a single sheet! Can such a collection of valuable matter be read week after week without exerting a very decided educational influence on the reader?

Making all allowances for any indifferent matter which even a religious paper may contain, there is enough of a truly valuable character furnished during the year to render it cheaper, in a pecuniary point of view, than any similar amount of matter contained in books. While the paper should not set aside the use of books, its value ought not to be overlooked, as it ministers to our ever-recurring wants, and refreshes the mind in those hours that lie between business or more systematic study.

It is not a fanciful idea that a difference is discernible between a family in which a religious newspaper is well and regularly read, and one into which such an educational messenger never enters. It may not always be easy to describe the difference, but it is felt in many ways to exist. In regard to the operations of the church especially, you feel a wideness and freeness in such a family which you find not where the paper is absent. How can it be otherwise? The very selfishness which excludes a religious paper from the family is already a sad contraction. The absence of the information which such a paper alone can give makes the narrowness which you feel to exist still more oppressive. All pastors know what this contractedness is, though it may be difficult to describe it.

If any have been tempted by the severity of the times to dismiss their religious newspaper, we beg them to reconsider the matter. However much you may feel the necessity of economy, you can not afford to suspend your religious paper. What you save by it in money you will certainly lose in that which is much more valuable and precious.—Christian Worker.

How to Stop a Newspaper.

The following, from one of our exchanges, so fully and clearly expresses our views on the subject that we copy it without comment: "You have an undoubted right to stop a newspaper when you feel disposed, upon the payment of all arrearages. And when you discontinue a paper, do so manfully. Don't be so spiteful as to throw it back to the postmaster with a contemptuous, 'I don't want it any longer!' and have 'refused' written on the margin, and have the paper returned to the editor. No gentleman ever stopped it in that way, no matter if his head is covered with gray hairs that should be honorable. If you do not longer wish to receive a newspaper, write a note to the editor like a man, saying so, and be sure that all arrearages are paid. This is the way to stop a newspaper."—St. Louis Advocate.

We have a right to lay flowers on the coffins of our Christian dead. They will come forth in the beauty of new life. We open our New Testament and see Jesus, after he had risen, away beyond death. He has not been harmed by dying. No beam of the beauty of his life is quenched. The threads of the earthly life are not severed. He has not forgotten his friends, but takes up again the old companionships and friendships. So will it be with our beloved ones who sleep in Jesus. They will rise, and they will be the same persons we have known here, only they will be cleansed of their earthliness and their mortality. And they will not have forgotten us. Love never faileth. We shall resume friendship's story on the other side.—J. R. Miller, D. D.

A Christian lady once said to Dr. Adam Clark: "Very true, the water of life is free, but we must pay for the pitchers to carry it in." There are some who think the pitchers ought to be thrown in free also.

Street Beggars.

Generous persons find it hard to pass street beggars without responding to their piteous tales; but too often the kindness rendered is merely putting a premium on mendicancy. Hundreds drive a heavy business at begging. They have got it down to a fine point. Their devices for obtaining alms by the wayside are very ingenious. In London beggary has been reduced to a system. The Mendicity Society of that city has been looking up the matter, and its revelations are startling. The secretary, Mr. Eric A. Buchanan, says that in a wide experience he has rarely discovered a deserving street mendicant. However pitiable objects seem at sight, they, as a rule, turn out, upon investigation, to be mere shams. The babies and children who are paraded with so much ado have been hired for the occasion, at the rate of sixpence a day; and where the little ones do not have a sufficiently distressed appearance, they are often ill treated. It has also been found that there is "an army of begging letter writers," who have by practice attained a wonderful proficiency. There are at least 500 of these "professionals" in London, who make a good living by writing these epistles. Some of them show remarkable ingenuity and skill in their composition. Some experts have made it so lucrative that they are able to live in expensive houses, keep their servants, and indulge in luxury and display." "Even bona fide certificates and documents are doctored to serve the purposes of deception." These facts are of an astonishing character, but can not be disputed. Mendicity on this side of the water may not have reached so great a degree of perfection, but there are instances where it has been plied with such success as to enrich those who have tactfully and persistently worked it. Street begging ought not to be encouraged. Usually it is not the meritorious who parade their needs in public.—Presbyterian.

A Sweet Spirit.

It is possible to attach too much importance to the manifestation of a sweet spirit. The fact that a man is able to keep sweet while contending for his cherished beliefs may mean much for his heart, but it should not be taken to mean anything for his head. "They say that Dr. Chrysostem is a heretic, but I don't see how a man of his sweet spirit can believe anything wrong," says a young admirer of the great Doctor's books. It does not occur to him that the sweetness of the Doctor's spirit does not prove the soundness of his reasoning, however much it may add to its attractiveness. Satan is a shrewd judge of men, and he is generally fortunate in the class of men he selects to advocate his insinuating doctrines. He does not waste his time infecting coarse, gruff, bitter men with subtle heresies. If there were no venders of falsehoods but disagreeable folk, it would not take long for truth to get the upper hand in the world. A naturally sweet disposition does not insure the head from error any more than honeyed lips insure the heart from bitterness.—Richmond Advocate.

Nothing doth so establish the soul, amidst the rolling and turbulency of present things, as to both look above them and beyond them; above them to the steady and good hand by which they are ruled; and beyond them to the sweet and beautiful home to which by that hand we may be brought.

One of the illusions is that the present hour is not the critical, decisive hour. Write it on your heart that every day is the best day in the year. No man has learned anything rightly until he knows that every day is Doomsday.—Emerson.

ALONE

BY M. T. B.

When the shades of night are falling,
And stars bedeck the sky,
I long for one dear heart to greet
Of the happy days gone by.

Of the thoughts that come, and thoughts that go,
Across my weary breast,
Till my life seems full of sadness,
And I long to be at rest.

O, happy days, so full of love,
So joyous, sweet, and dear,
Could ye not with me always stay?
Why leave me lone and drear?

No hand stretched out in loving clasp
To help me on the way,
Across the weary stepping-stones
That I must pass each day.

No thought of mine that meets a chord
Of loving sympathy,
As heart to heart with one accord
Beats into melody.

But I am waiting, waiting,
For the day that knows no night,
Where the clouds, forever parted,
Shed their eternal light.

And heart meets heart forever,
With dear ones gone before,
And Christ shall bid us welcome
With him for evermore.

Miss Bennett's Address at the W. P. and H. M. Annual Convention.

HELD IN LITTLE ROCK, ARK., NOV. 5 TO 10, 1896.

Every organization owes its existence to certain causes or conditions which have created the need of it, and the strength or weakness of these conditions, and the force with which they appeal to the people directly or indirectly affected by them, determine the character and importance of the organization. For instance, the great W. C. T. U. movement of our times. What gave it birth? What to-day perpetuates it in such power, and causes thousands of women at the noontide hour each day to pour out their hearts in prayer to God, crying, "How long, O Lord, how long?" The awful drink scourge, claiming its victim from almost every home circle, and causing a wail of anguish to go up from the heart of woman that shall echo on until God shall say, "It is enough—vengeance is mine."

What was it that gave rise to the last of our great Christian organizations, the Salvation Army? Was it not the inability or unwillingness of older organized forces, or of individual effort, to cope with the powers of death and destruction in the over-crowded slums of the great cities? The masses would not go to the churches, and that which vitalized the church must go to the masses if they were to be redeemed. Yet these two great movements, having for their propellant causes social conditions that threatened and endangered the welfare of the Church and State, did not spring full grown into existence, nor did they reach their present positions of influence and power without meeting the fiercest opposition and the most intolerant prejudice, without struggle and labor, without tears and prayers—and, above all, without a steadfast belief on the part of the individual members in the righteousness of the causes which they advocated. The great enemy of mankind does not sit idly by while the Captain of our salvation masses his forces for the battle. His banners, emblazoned with the motto, "Might is right," have so long led the armies of the world, that he hastens to array "principalities and powers" against the audacious soul that dares lift his voice against that shibboleth of hell.

We, who are assembled here, can recall when ten years ago one single, frail woman, now a member of this body, the gifted editor of Our Homes, in the face of opposition in high places, apathy and indifference on all sides, courageously and persistently advocated and projected an organized effort among the women of the church to assist in building homes for the itinerant preacher.

It was a fact that during the first half century of American Methodism one-half of the preachers were compelled to locate after a few years' service, because the church could not give men with families over a bare living. It was also a fact that the church, in her great forward movements, was marvelously extending her borders, having put a financial assessment on her membership for building houses of worship, and given the leadership of that movement to one of the ablest and most untiring men in her ranks. Yet, while the churches were being built, the preachers and their families, who served them, had no homes provided, and in some of the older Conferences, but especially on the Western frontier, many preachers and their families patiently suffered the same hardships and privations that the faithful men and women endured who served with Coke and Asbury in the early days of Methodism. Notwithstanding this condition of things confronted the church, the new movement met with but little favor, and even a large percentage of the preachers—who were to be the beneficiaries—looked on with coldness and indifference. Later, when by change of constitution, the scope of the work was enlarged and the society authorized to enter upon the broad field of Home Mission Work, thus opening a great and effectual door to the women of Southern Methodism, through which their dormant energies might be aroused and their scattering efforts conserved to the church, a mere pronounced opposition was encountered, and from many quarters arose the cry, "Too many societies in the church—too much machinery—everybody is doing home mission work; we do not need another organization." But through it all, and over it all, the work has gone forward and we have lengthened our cords and strengthened our stakes until, in this, the tenth year of its existence, we can begin to feel the kindly atmosphere of public favor, and to see the fruits of our seed-sowing. And it has scarcely been more than a time of seed-sowing. While we can look abroad over the wide field of the church and see here and there some growing grain and even a few garnered sheaves, the morning chill and the loneliness of the seed sower are around us—and much of the ground seems rocky and barren. But the brightness of the Master's promise is about us and in due season we shall reap, if we faint not.

And it is of this seed sowing that I would talk with you now. It is for this that we come together—for this that we must labor and pray. Up to the present time the work of the society can be classed under three general heads:

1. Parsonage building.
2. City mission work.
3. Educational mission work.

The first, parsonage building, has already assumed its place in the church as the strong, right arm of the Board of Extension. To quote those familiar words of the General Secretary, Dr. David Morton, more parsonages have been built in the first six years after the organization of the society than in all the first fifty years of Methodism. A constantly increasing loan fund is one of the strong adjuncts of this department, and annually the applications for assistance, both by loans and donations, are increasing. In addition to this loan fund, the department supplies, with its loving ministry of immediate relief, has constantly grown in efficiency.

But a radical change is needed in this line of our work, and to this I would call your attention. Dating back to the earlier days of the society and the constitution under which we then worked, all membership dues—the half retained by the Conference society, the half sent to the general treasury—have been used for parsonage building. While this is no longer obligatory so far as the Central Committee is concerned, the law of precedent has been so strong and the applications so numerous, that each meeting sees, practically the same course pursued, and donations to parsonages continue to the detriment of other departments of the work. There are two strong reasons why there should be a change here.

First—The parsonage building, though very important, receiving all the money retained in the Conference societies, and an equal amount from the Central Committee, is made to greatly overshadow any other and all other departments of the work. The existing conditions do not justify it, and the growth of the organization must be retarded—has been already—by continuing this course of action.

Second—Many pastors and some congregations have learned that it is much easier to secure a donation from the parsonage society than it is to raise money from the people. It requires less time and less personal effort. I have watched the course of a certain preacher in the church for several years past, with growing interest. He goes to his appointment from Conference; if there is a parsonage, moves in—observes, almost immediately, that some part of the house has not been entirely finished; being something of a mechanic, he does a little work himself—learns what was originally expended on the house, and then makes an application to the society. If there is no parsonage on his charge, he generally secures a subscription of a few hundred dollars, makes his application to the society, and as he knows how to do it in good form, and follow it by a personal appeal, secures what he wants, and builds a parsonage that the next preacher doesn't want to live in. Every church that can be self-supporting, and is not, is enfeebled by assistance from other sources. Every pastor who fails to impress upon his people the duty of giving, and to help them attain to a higher degree of Christian liberality by urging a ready response to every need of the church, falls far below his high privilege as a pastor and weakens himself as well as his congregation. The Parsonage and Home Mission Society must not be an instrument by which the strength of the church may be enervated. Parsonage building ought to be a department of the Home Mission Society, of equal, but not greater importance than any other.

City Mission Work—The calls for city mission work are increasing rapidly—alarmingly. To quote the words of Dr. Strong: "The city is the nerve center of our civilization. It is also the storm center." While for years the cities of the North and East have had a large foreign-born population pouring in upon them, with a few exceptions, our Southern cities have escaped; but the great social changes following the Civil War and the problems connected with the labor question have driven thousands of our people from comfortable and even luxurious country homes into contracted and comparatively uncomfortable town or city homes. The negroes have followed the example of the white people. Avenues of work are over-crowded—the poor have grown poorer and the rich have increased their extravagant personal habits and fast living. Financial depression has followed. The haunts of sin and vice, always alluring, open their doors on all sides, and every year thousands of lives are wrecked that ought to have been saved to the church and society. We are no longer exempt from the foreigner. The Cubans in the South, the Chinamen and Japanese in the West, are demanding our help, our love, our Christ. To-day there is scarcely a phase of Christian work in the great cities of New York and Chicago that is not needed in our own cities and towns. So far our society has only entered upon a few; and these only emphasize the need of others. The noble band of women, who, under the auspices of this organization, have been chosen by you to carry the gospel to lepers of our modern civilization—the outcast women—those at whom so many are ready to cast a stone, pronouncing their sin unpardonable, yet taking to their bosoms and raising to high stations their partners in vice—these workers sorely need the help of other forms of city mission work to lift up those down-trodden ones.

They need the social Christian settlement in the midst of these dens of iniquity, with its open and inviting door; with its social evenings, where Christ is in the midst; its industrial schools, its reading-rooms, and its inmates with their kindly words of sympathy and encouragement that mean so much to those who get only curses and blows. Connected with each one of these rescue missions we ought to have a trained nurse—a consecrated woman, who could minister to the wretched, sin-cursed bodies, and visiting from house to house, look up and nurse the sick and afflicted. These district nurses are sorely needed in the large cities. There ought to be women of wealth in our churches who would gladly support one or more of them if our work could be brought to their attention and their hearts enlisted. To approach and enlist wealth and intelligence in behalf of degradation is, however, no easy task, no grateful work. But we know that it is not by might nor by power, but by the spirit of the living God that these things are done; and if the spirit be in us, we will do them. I can not stop to dwell on the manifold forms of city mission work—practical religion—the Christ going about doing good in the hearts and lives of those who have left all and followed him, that we need to consider and reach out after; but there are two large classes of society touching our lives every day, whether we be in the country, in the towns, or in the large cities, to which our society has as yet given no helping hand. We have done nothing for the negroes. Our great church, as a church, has done but little. Individual members may, doubtless, have done much, but as an organization the path of duty is plain before us, and, as the Woman's Home Mission Society of the M. E. Church, South, we must enterprise some special work for this great race of people. As a convention, I beg your earnest consideration for this cause.

The other class to which I would call your attention is a far more difficult people to reach. Intrenched in wealth and pride, immersed in the business or pleasures of the world, and knowing only too well that the church herself places a false estimate upon these things, they look with indifference, even contempt, upon her ordinances, and fail to hear her exhortations and warnings. But we believe the gospel is the power of God unto the salvation of every one that believeth, and through this society that power must be made manifest, even to the "neglected rich." Three hundred years ago, in the early dawn of that era when the light was breaking forth from an unchained Bible, the prayer of Erasmus was, "I wish that even all women might read the Gospels and the Epistles of Paul." Four thousand years before the Psalmist said: "The Lord giveth the Word, and the women that publish the tidings are a great host." The prophecy has been fulfilled and the prayer answered for the women of this land. Through the Christ-life made manifest in our own; by the works which we, as a society, shall show to the world; by the use of the Word which he has given we can carry the Christ even to the "neglected rich." I have no plan to offer, but in the history of our own work I call your attention to this fact. Two sisters, Misses Emma and Tina Tucker, called of God, through you, to leadership in our city mission work, have, by their Bible readings, reached a constantly widening circle of people. The rich and the poor alike have heard them gladly, and the Holy Spirit has honored the use of the Word by them in the redemption of many souls to Christ. If the open Bible in the hands of the consecrated womanhood of heathen lands is "the power of God unto the salvation of many," may not the divine grace flow through similar channels in Christian lands?

And, now, to the third and last division of our work—the department of educational mission work. All thorough educational work requires the expenditure of time, thought, labor and money. To equip and develop a good school is not the work of a year—scarcely a generation; yet in no department of our work is there so much of encouragement and promise. The schools for the Cubans at Tampa, the Industrial School and Orphanage at Greenville, Va.; the mountain school enterprises slowly developing in the Cumberland Mountains, are already evidences of the divine approval and blessing on the work.

But in this department also I would warn you of what seems to me to be an impending danger. Our work has attracted the attention of the church, and in many of the remote parts of our mountain country, or the poor and sparsely settled portions of some of the Conferences, where the public school system is totally inadequate to the need, urgent entreaties come for the establishment of home mission schools. We must guard against the projection of large or expensive schools in more than a few central localities. Even a considerable gift of money or land ought not to tempt us to it. Let us move slowly and surely in this work, laying broad foundations and building permanent structures thereupon. To quote the words of one who has had large experience: "A few institutions in commanding positions, thoroughly equipped, will achieve more satisfactory results than many smaller ones in poor locations, indifferently sustained." For these isolated and destitute communities the day-school, taught by a godly man or woman, as the conditions may require, at a cost of a few hundred dollars per year, is the plan I would suggest to the society for the present.

The houses for these schools need not be large or expensive, but the location of them must be determined with great care. The society must not, for a moment, lose sight of the fact that they are the almoners of the gifts of their Lord, and that they owe it to his poor to see that no dollar be used where he has plenty in the hands of his resident children to supply all their need. We must study the geography, choose strategic points; listen, not merely to the cry of want, but plant for the future; administer with business foresight, relegate sentiment to the background, and remember that one mistake in location, one enterprise proving a failure, or showing a careless waste of funds, will do more to chill enthusiasm, and clog the channels of benevolence, and fill the mouths of objectors with arguments against our work, than a dozen successes can overcome. Let us, then, spare no effort to make our central institutions the very best of their kind; then establish around each of them wisely located feeders. Small, cheap schools, that will give to each community an object lesson in Christian living, with some industrial features, and especially with systematic training in the study and teaching of the Bible, and we will see before long a sturdy Christianity growing in the soil, that can now show nothing better than that symbolized by Jonah's gourd—springing up in a night, it perishes in a night.

And, now, if we would realize our highest aim and become a vital force in the redemption of the world; if we would secure the money so imperatively needed to advance the work we have begun, we must arouse and gain the co-operation of that great body of women who call themselves Methodists, and who have taken the vows of the church at her altars; who, but from ignorance, apathy, or indifference, refuse to support her institutions, or to be guided by her counsels. If everyone of the 800,000 women of Southern Methodism was an active, intelligent member of this Home Mission Society, not only America, but the uttermost parts of the earth would "see a great light in darkness," and we might well look for the speedy coming of "a new heaven and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness." And why should it not be so? Ignorance can be enlightened, apathy can be aroused, indifference can be overcome. No greater work lies before this society than that of bringing to the church people accurate information concerning the condition of those it seeks to reach. We must deal with realities. Whether these people live in the city slums, the fastnesses of the mountains, or on the Western frontier, reliable, accurate information as to their home lives, their physical or spiritual destitution, their willingness and ability to receive and be developed by such help as can be given them, must be obtained and put before the church. Facts—not the theories, not romances—are what men and women need to enlist their interest and secure their help. How to do this, and thus enter upon a larger and wider field of usefulness, is a matter for the prayerful consideration of this convention.

In conclusion, all of our efforts, all of our meetings, all of our plans will be in vain, if we have not the Christ spirit in us. We may be the most active philanthropists, we may be the most aggressive workers in ameliorating the condition of the ignorant and debased—and these are good; we may give all our goods to the poor, and our bodies to be burned; but if we have not the Christ in our own hearts, we can not carry him to others. It is our blessed privilege, our bounden duty to be baptized with power for his work. It is ours to sit at his feet and tell him all things whatsoever we have done. It is ours to go apart into the desert and rest with him. It is ours to stand upon the mountain top and see him transfigured before us. He longs to say to us: "Behold, I send you forth." "Feed my sheep." My sisters, if we hear and obey his voice, if we live that life which is hid with Christ in God, this society, this work will become a mighty power, for it is Christ that worketh in us to will and to do of his own good pleasure—and his pleasure is the salvation of the whole world.

Goes Home with Zaccheus.

The story of Zaccheus is one of unique and growing interest. It sparkles like a jewel with many facets. We have to do with a single phase of it to-day. Jesus, taking advantage of the manifest interest of the tax-collector and reading the purpose of his heart beyond its outward expression, presumed to suggest an interview with him at home. Here is a pointer for Christian workers: Be modest and courteous and yet persistent in holy toil. Don't let some petty Chesterfieldian edict, or modern society fad block the way to a soul. Go not only to those who need you, but to those who need you most and want you least. Seek open doors of access for Christ. If they are not wide open, but ajar, make the most of that. Lovingly and gently oil the hinges and lift the latch. If it is not even ajar find the key that will unlock the door. If we would seek out the neglected and despised as Jesus did, and go to them in his name, we might be surprised at the glad welcome we should receive. Many a publican might astonish us by the haste and humility and joyfulness with which he would open his heart and home to the Christ-like messenger.

There are lessons here, not a few, if we had time to discover them.

And yet Jesus sought, found, and saved this hopeless publican. He's just the same to-day. Zaccheus was an officer of the Roman government, but was converted. There is a special work for ministers and Christian laymen among the officers of the law, and especially in legislative centers. Zaccheus, after the type of his class, was probably an avaricious money-getter and a wicked extortioner. But still Jesus saved him from this almost incurable disease. Can he not cure the "gold fever" of the nineteenth century money-loving American?

Zaccheus was evidently in bad repute, and that justly, and yet Jesus dared to fellowship him in order to save him. And he did it chiefly by seeking an interview, going home with him, and there, by gentle words and sweet influence, transforming him. The moral is, seek and use hospitality and all social intercourse as a method of revealing and commending Jesus Christ.—Epworth Herald.

Plan a Surprise!

We were talking about a certain minister. "No, we do not call our pastor a great preacher," our friend remarked. "But he has a surprise for us every Sunday morning, and the fact that there is to be something different makes us want to go to church."

Something different. That minister is a philosopher. He has studied human nature to some purpose. The average hearer abhors monotony. That little legitimate surprise which the minister plans for his people gives the variety for which they yearn. He is not graceful, nor eloquent, nor learned—so we are assured. But he keeps clear of the ruts!—Guardian.

A non-church-goer, willing to justify himself, explains that he was insulted in church ten years ago, and, of course, he has not attended church since that time. But Jesus was insulted at church, and yet he went back to the synagogue on the following Sabbath just as though nothing had happened. We do not suppose that any church-goer ever had more to discourage him, in the conduct of the worshipers and in their manifest spirit, than Jesus had, and yet he has set us an example in regular and faithful church attendance. We know a man who was insulted at the polls on election day, and yet he never thought of giving up his privilege of voting.—United Presbyterian.

Christianity has made immense gains in the attention and devotion of young people. It has identified, in new ways Christian character with good citizenship. It is more aggressive in its spirit and more inclusive in its aims. There is a much wider interest in applying Christian principles to the solution of problems affecting the present happiness and mutual helpfulness of mankind. Interest in missions has broadened, not lessened. Inquiries concerning the person of Christ and men's relation with him are more numerous and more earnest than ever before.—The Congregationalist.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. W. Winans Drake, Pastor, Crowley, La., Nov. 16: "We have just closed a powerful meeting here. Bro. J. L. Morrill, of Cartersville, Ga., did the preaching. No count was kept of conversions; but the conversions were of a clear type. Over forty have joined the church; quite a number have erected family altars, a number of backslidden church members have been reclaimed, and quite a number have entered the experience of entire sanctification."

Rev. H. Armstrong: "Closed a meeting on Sunday night, Nov. 15, in Franklin. Rev. J. J. Smylie, of Mississippi, did the preaching. There were several professions of faith, some of the backslidden were reclaimed, there were ten accessions to the church, and the most spiritual members were much revived. Notwithstanding the busy sugar-making season, the meeting was a success. The night after the close a storm struck the parsonage with a happy crowd, who brought a number of the necessaries of life. After the storm there was a calm, and then a most enjoyable prayer meeting."

Rev. Jno. W. Price, P. C., Greenwood station, North Mississippi Conference: "We have just closed a good meeting in this charge. Rev. Jno. P. Lowry, of Little Rock, Ark., did the preaching, and did it well. Bro. Lowry calls penitents to the altar, and they come, and they get religion in the old-time way—get the old-time religion that makes you love God, and love everybody, and hate sin and turn from it. We have some good workers in this church, and they work. The preacher in charge preaches twice every Sabbath, and every other Sabbath three times. At the Mission Room, down in the heart of the city, a service is held every Sunday at 10 A. M. for men only. At 11 A. M. preaching at the church. At 3:30 P. M. Bible class at the Mission Room, and at 4:30 P. M. service at the jail. During the week we have Sunday-school teacher's meeting, prayer meeting, League meeting, and choir practice. In addition to these, our women are busy looking after their special services. We have had 53 additions to the church this year. During our recent revival my eldest son, Dr. C. M. Price, after having resisted the call to preach for six years, made up his mind to put down surgeon's knife and the medicine case, and join the itinerant ranks. With our artesian wells—overflowing wells—electric lights, a good telephone system, and prohibition, Greenwood promises at no distant day to be one of the largest towns in the State. Our people have been phenomenally healthy during the past Summer and Fall, and we give the credit to the improvement in our water supply. And now, in conclusion, allow me to say in regard to the district question, that Bishop Galloway has authority in this matter, knows the field, and will do the right thing. The matter is in safe hands, and I shall be satisfied with what he does."

Mrs. W. C. Bullock, Lumberton, Miss., Nov. 12: "In the fall of '78 (you were then our pastor, and with pleasure do I remember your pleasant visits) we moved from Meridian, Miss., to Louisville, Miss., where we resided nine years—long enough to be fully identified with its people, and to learn that nobler never lived. We have not all these many years been rocked in the lap of luxury and ease. Alternately prosperity and reverses have come to us, yet in all our movements I feel that God is leading us, though sometimes the chastening rod falls heavily. We had only been in this pleasant little town a few months when God's message came for the pride of our household—our lovely little daughter, Mary. She died Aug. 1, '96. Although only nine years and ten months of age, Mary was a Christian. . . . Willing hearts and willing hands can find work for the Master any and everywhere. God has appointed me to work among the children, and sweeter work can no one have. In our Sabbath-school we have two infant classes. Mrs. Jenkins has one, I have the other. In addition, I have a juvenile singing class of about twenty little ones, which I teach once a week. I use Bertha F. Veller's 'Song and Study for God's Little Ones,' and a better little song book could not be put into the hands of our children. Assisted by Miss Hughes, a teacher in the Lumberton High School, we are preparing for a Thanksgiving service, the proceeds to be divided between our Sunday-school and the Orphan Asylum at Natchez, Miss. . . . Our much beloved and able pastor, Rev. W. H. Huntley, has organized an Epworth League, which is properly officered and equipped for noble work. That the Giver of all good may still continue his loving kindness to you and yours, Mr. Editor, is my prayer."

COUSHATTA, LA.

In McTyeire's History of Methodism, page 327, he records: "About 1763 a deep wave of revival passed over the societies. The peculiar work of the Spirit seemed to be what St. Paul calls 'the perfecting of the saints.' Many were awakened and converted, but the work of sanctification engaged the preachers and people in a special manner." Such was Bro. Patterson's recent meeting at Coushatta. Bro. Lasley, a lay evangelist, assisted him. He is a man of simple manners, possessed of "common sense," full of faith and the Holy Ghost. The prejudice against the doctrine of entire sanctification seemed to be absolutely gone as soon as the people were intelligently instructed, and they eagerly sought the experience that our fathers rejoiced in and God so signally blessed. As is always the case, so far as I have observed, the best and most spiritual-minded got the blessing first—Bro. Moore, one of our preachers, being among the number. No doubt the majority of the leading members had either obtained or were seeking the blessing before the meeting closed. I left some days earlier.

Bro. Patterson's successors will find quite a number at Coushatta who are no longer "babes," but "need strong meat." Nearly a score must have been sanctified before I left. Praise the Lord for the "depositum of Methodism," that "religion in earnest" which satisfies the soul and gives power over the world.

P. O. LOWREY.

Mansfield, La.

TRENTON, MISS.

Trenton circuit consists of six appointments. We have taken in a little new ground this year. We have a membership of 525. We have to preach ten sermons per month. The Lord is with us and graciously blessing our poor efforts. Our protracted meetings were seasons of refreshings from the presence of the Lord.

The first one held was at Pine Grove, beginning on Saturday before second Sunday in July. Here we were assisted by Rev. C. C. Griffin and Rev. Wm. Donald. The Lord was with us in power. Souls were converted and the people of God most wonderfully blessed. The people at Pine Grove had made a sacrifice for the Lord in ceiling and reseating their church, and they were ready for a meeting. A weekly prayer meeting was established.

Our next meeting was Gasque Chapel. At this place we were assisted by Rev. F. S. Lane and others. Here we had a glorious revival. Sinners convicted, mourners converted and the people of God most gloriously blessed. A weekly prayer meeting was established, quite a number of family altars erected, and the Sunday-school received new life.

We went from here to Polkville, where we were assisted by Revs. L. J. Jones and C. C. Griffin. Rev. R. A. Sibley, Sr., preached one of the best sermons on Sunday at 11 A. M. The meeting lasted five days, and was blessed of the Lord. We are indebted to these brethren for the way in which they preached the Word. They did all the preaching. Penitents were at the altar, but so far as we could see no one was converted.

Our next meeting was held at New Prospect, where, with the efficient help of our much beloved presiding elder, Rev. W. W. Simmons, and Rev. L. Kendall we fought the devil for four days. There were some difficulties in the way, on account of which the meeting was not satisfactory. The Word was preached faithfully, and we feel will accomplish good.

We went from here to Clear Creek, where we were assisted by Revs. F. A. Robinson and M. J. Carley. Our meeting at this place was, indeed, a success. Quite a number of conversions, several accessions to the church, several new family altars erected.

We next planted our battery at Wicker School-house, at which place the Lord took charge of the services from the beginning. We think much good was accomplished. Our next and last meeting was held at Trenton. Here we were assisted by Rev. L. J. Jones, of Raleigh, and Rev. R. A. Sibley, Sr., of Trenton. These brethren did the preaching faithfully and with power. It seemed that they had unusual liberty in preaching the Word, and it was accompanied with the power of the Holy Spirit. It is said by some to be the best meeting held here in fifteen years.

Mr. Editor, we think Trenton charge is on the up grade. We are moving upon all lines of church work. We have ceiled two of our churches, and reseated two, and added some valuable improvements to the parsonage this year. We have a good church building at every appointment—all completed except one. Our Conference collections are in advance of last year, and we think the preacher's and presiding elder's salary will also be in advance of last year. The day of final accounts for this year will soon be at hand. We hope to be able to make a good report. We are trying to do better over here. Pray for us.

J. H. FOREMAN.

W. C. BLACK, Publisher.

Many a man would defend his money with his life, and many a man does this very thing without knowing it. There are thousands of men who decline to defend their lives with their money. They are so intent on money-getting that they forget their health. The health cannot be trifled with. The body resents neglect. Little disorders become big ones if they are allowed to run on. The man whose digestion is poor, pretty soon finds that he is losing flesh. He doesn't weigh as much as he did. He doesn't realize that he is losing vitality; that he is losing strength; that he is losing capacity for work; and that even his brain must of necessity become weaker, if it is not nourished. Loss of flesh means that the whole body is going to wreck. It is fatally easy to run downhill. A man keeps going faster and faster as he goes down. When health begins to leak out, it leaks very fast. The time to stop it is right away. The way to stop it is by taking Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It is the greatest tonic and invigorator that was ever prepared. It is the discovery of a practicing physician, eminent and successful in his profession, the head of one of the greatest medical institutions in the world, The Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, of Buffalo, N. Y. It is an almost infallible cure for consumption, and for all the minor troubles that lead to consumption, chief among these are emaciation and general, bodily debility. The "Discovery" purifies and enriches the blood, invigorates the nerves, stimulates digestion, brings back a healthy appetite, healthy sleep, and a healthy, natural action of all the organs of the body. Druggists sell it.

Every man, woman and child in the United States ought to have access to a copy of Dr. Pierce's great work, the "People's Common Sense Medical Adviser." The book consists of 1008 pages, and is a complete medical library in one volume. Every one may have a copy, paper-covered, absolutely free, if he will send 21 one-cent stamps, to pay for the cost of mailing only, to the World's Dispensary Medical Association, Buffalo, N. Y. If a handsome, durable French cloth binding is desired, send ten cents additional (thirty-one cents in all).

Thursday, November 26, 1896.

The Methodists of New Orleans will hold a Thanksgiving service at Carondelet Street Church, on Thursday, the twenty-sixth, at 11 A. M. The sermon will be preached by Rev. S. J. Davies.

Barrels of tears have been shed over troubles that never came.

It is our duty to pray for our daily bread, but it is none the less so to work for it.

He gives his children good advice, but sets them a bad example. Did you ever see him?

He who can see a friend becoming alienated from him without pain is not worthy of a friend.

Not in the indulgence of the groveling propensities of our fallen nature, but in the subjection of our wills to the will of God is true happiness to be found.

It is as impossible for a man to pass through life without exerting an influence over others as it is for him to outrun his shadow. This should be an awful thought to those whose lives are evil.

The worst of men sometimes have aspirations after something better than the things of time and sense. A crown of glory awaits the man (preacher or what not) who can breathe upon this spark of divinity within and enkindle it into a holy flame.

They greatly err who judge of a man's spirituality by the amount of threadbare, antiquated cant that rolls from his lips. He is the best Christian who is the most unselfish, and who is strongest to resist temptation and surmount obstacles, and do whatsoever his hands find to do for the advancement of the Redeemer's kingdom.

The P. and H. M. Conference.

Louisiana was represented at the recent Conference of the Parsonage and Home Mission Society, at Little Rock, by Mrs. Florence E. Russ, of this city. Bishop Galloway preached the annual sermon. Bishop Hargrove was present. The annual address by the president, Miss Belle Bennett, will be found on our second page. Four Rescue Missions are now in operation under the auspices of this society—at Nashville, Dallas, Macon and Atlanta. A movement in this direction, we understand, will be inaugurated soon in this city. In commemoration of the noble work of Miss Lucinda B. Holm, the Convention resolved to establish a loan fund of $1,000 to be called "The Lucinda B. Helm Loan Fund." The sum of $800 was raised on the spot. In the matter of educational work, it was resolved to make a beginning as soon as practicable in New Orleans, Wichita, Spokane, Los Angeles, and other places. The next session of the Conference goes to Knoxville, Tenn.

Meditating upon Noble Themes.

It is generally supposed that what a man thinks about has little to do with his conduct. In reality, however, this is equivalent to saying that an effect may be uncaused, and that thought and action have no necessary connection with each other. On the contrary, philosophy, religion, and human experience teach that as a man thinks so will his life be. Well does the Scripture say that "a good man out of the good treasure of his heart bringeth forth good things: and an evil man, out of the evil treasure, bringeth forth evil things." Conduct, be it said, never rises above the level of thought and aspiration. Our lives will be good or evil according as our thoughts are the one or the other. A man's behavior mirrors more or less perfectly the nature of his hopes, feelings, and purposes. Men everywhere, except when they fear to do so, act as they think and believe. The men who believe that the world owes them a living are the ones who recruit the ranks of the tramps and socialists. The libertine disbelieves in virtue, and consequently gives unbridled license to his lust whenever he dares to do so.

Since right thinking is the source of right action, it is of the greatest importance that we guard well our thoughts, and meditate as much as possible upon that which is pure and elevating. That the soul is dyed by its thoughts is tremendously true. Few, however, seem to realize this. To let the imagination wander at will, or to allow the mind to dwell upon trivial, unworthy objects is to render ourselves incapable of originating noble thoughts and purposes, and of appreciating them in others.

The habit of right thinking is one that ought to be assidnously cultivated. It is not enough to withdraw attention from base things. The mind must be furnished with wholesome food, else it will content itself with low and vile pabulum. Unless it has something to think about, it will prey upon itself, and become morbid and feeble. It is true in the realm of mind as well as of matter that two things can not occupy the same space at the same time. Where evil, foolish thoughts are entertained, good thoughts do not abide. Unprofitable, sensual, ignoble objects must be displaced by the true, the beautiful, and the good. An idle brain, says the proverb, is the devil's workshop.

Small indeed is the number of people who really meditate. No little harm comes from allowing the mind to dwell upon whatever chance presents or fancy suggests. We should be masters of ourselves as well as of our circumstances; but we can not be, unless we learn to master our thoughts. "To be good company for ourselves," says Sir John Lubbock, "we must store our minds well, fill them with happy and pure thoughts, with pleasant memories of the past, and reasonable hopes for the future." Sir Isaac Newton, when asked how he came to make such wonderful discoveries in science, replied, "By always thinking about them."

He who aspires to live worthily needs to think much about God and eternal things. Nothing so lifts us out of ourselves and above commonplace things as meditation upon the matchless perfections of the one Supreme Being whose glory fills immensity. In what way can we more effectually overcome the corrupting influence of the world upon our thoughts and affections than by studying God as revealed in Nature and in his Word? As the heaven is high above the earth, so are His thoughts higher than our thoughts. It is folly to expect consistency and radiant goodness of the man who is not a devout and constant student of the Scriptures. Where else do we find such lofty ideals, such bold imagery, such tender emotion, such wealth of love, such purity of diction, such incentives to righteousness, such exhaustless treasures of wisdom? Says Bishop Warren: "The Bible demands a breadth of soul that is delightful to contemplate. It is to be open and sympathetic to all the universe. No pent-up Utica contracts its powers. It is to be at home in this world, or any other, or no other. It is to have such penetrative insight that it can see God when other men can see nothing, hear him when other men say it thunders. The soul is to have a revelation in every spire of grass and every star in the sky." Yet some people who have read the Bible through a few times imagine they know about all it contains. Only when the mind is deeply imbued with the teachings of Holy Writ are we really prepared for devotion, acceptable service, and resistance of temptation.

Again, much good will come to the soul from communion with Nature, from the contemplation of the grandeur and beauty of her multitudinous forms. Appreciative study of, and interest in, the works of creation ought to characterize, not merely the scientist or the poet, but every true Christian; for we may "look through Nature up to Nature's God." If we have eyes to see, "the meanest flower that blows can give thoughts that lie too deep for tears." Unlike association with fallen man, no unhallowed influence emanates from intercourse with Nature in her varied forms of field and forest, mountain and glen, river and ocean, leaf and flower, insect and animal. Through all these she speaks to us of God's almighty power, of his ineffable wisdom and majesty, and of his incomprehensible omnipresence. No wonder Agassiz while investigating Nature's wondrous secrets, exclaimed: "O God! I think thy thoughts after thee!" If we will but list to Nature's voice, our thoughts will rise as on eagles' wings.

Another means of ennobling and enriching our thoughts is by the study of the best literature of ancient and modern times. The mind, it has been said, grows by what it feeds upon. It is distressing to think how much trash and filth people pour through their minds when there is such a superabundance of pure, profitable, and entertaining literature. It is better not to read at all than to read a bad book or a bad paper. To read without discrimination whatever comes in our way is to do ourselves a great injury. All of us ought to read, if possible, the great books of the world. We live in an age of marvelously cheap literature, and if we have nothing wholesome to read, the fault is all our own. It lies within our power to hold converse with the great and the good of both the past and the present. As some one has wisely remarked: "The chamber of the solitary student is peopled with immortal guests. He has friends who are always steadfast, who are never false, who are silent when he is weary, who go forth with him to his work, who await his return. In the literature of the world a grand society is open to all who choose to enter it." Alas! that we should waste so many golden hours in unprofitable conversation, or in reading trivialities or worse.

Furthermore, there is much to be gained by looking on the bright side of things, by taking note of the good around us. "Love taketh no account of evil." Things are seldom as bad as they might be. Not only is it wrong to be perpetually finding fault, and attributing evil motives to others; but the habit produces discontent and unhappiness. The papers every morning are filled with recitals of crime and misdeeds, while little is said about the thousands who continue to live virtuously. Let us remember, however, that wickedness is ever obtrusive. Goodness is modest. Acts of kindness, gifts of love, words of sympathy are not heralded abroad as are the vile acts of the ungodly.

Spiritual-mindedness may be cultivated also by considering how we may be helpful to our fellow-men. The oftener we think of the good of others, the more Christ-like we become. Who can estimate the good left undone through thoughtlessness, or the amount of misery and suffering chargeable to it. In devising ways and means to uplift the fallen, we rise higher ourselves. He who spends much time in meditating upon his duty and destiny is sure to be an unselfish, God-fearing man.

The World Moves.

English society is all stirred up. Something has occurred which has set everybody's tongue to wagging and furnished a lively theme for newspaper comment. Every journal in the land, from the mammoth London dailies down to the most obscure village weekly, has its editorial say, while communications come in without number. Our readers will stretch their eyes with amazement when we tell them the cause of all this stir. The new Archbishop of Canterbury is a teetotaler—one of that tribe who not only do not drink themselves, but who also refuse to put the bottle to their neighbors' lips. No previous incumbent of this exalted position has ever enjoyed such an unenviable (?) distinction. The capacious cellars of the Palace of Lambeth have always been [illegible] supplied with every variety of intoxicating beverages; and these have been furnished without stint to the magnates of society who are accustomed to frequent that famous abode of ecclesiastical authority. If an itemized statement of the liquor bill of this establishment were published, it would almost be regarded in this section as a slander. No wonder, then, that "society" is stirred from center to circumference when it is made known that the new Archbishop has for fifty years refused to allow anything that intoxicates to enter his lips. The newspapers and the society magnates are bringing a pressure to bear upon him to induce him not to set up his puritanical (!) notions in opposition to the views and feelings of the best people of the realm. It is thought, however, that those self constituted advisers of his Grace are likely to "have their trouble for their pains." The new Archbishop is a man of iron will who is as little affected by popular clamor as any man in the Queen's dominions. The elevation of such a man to this exalted station should be a cause of rejoicing to temperance people throughout the world.

NEW BOOKS.

LIFE AND LABORS OF FRANCIS ASBURY, BISHOP OF THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH IN AMERICA. By George G. Smith, D. D., author of "Life and Letters of James O. Andrew," "Life and Times of George F. Pierce," "History of Methodism in Georgia," etc. Nashville, Tenn: Publishing House M. E. Church, South, Barbee & Smith, agents. 1896. Price, $1.

By courtesy of the distinguished author, whom we are so fortunate as to number on our list of personal friends, the above-named work lies upon our table. It is a 12 mo. of 312 pages, gotten up in the substantial style which the public has learned to expect from our Publishing House. It is gracefully dedicated to our senior Bishop, John Christian Keener. The work meets a felt want in American Methodism. While every intelligent Methodist knows something about Asbury, comparatively few have anything like an intimate acquaintance with the details of his unique and remarkable career. In this case a noble subject and a thoroughly capable biographer have met. Dr. Smith is universally recognized as one of the most accurate, painstaking and reliable historians among us. In this work he has spared no pains in searching for material. All sources of information have been explored, not for the purpose of weaving a romance about the name of this pioneer of American Methodism, but in order to portray the man as he was.

The work is no fulsome eulogy. While it paints with unfeigned admiration that marvelous record of evangelistic toil which has scarcely a parallel in the annals of the world, and while it points out with pardonable pride the lofty source of that heroic career, it makes no effort at canonization. It records alike the facts which make for and those which make against the glory of the great pioneer. We do not mean that there is anything bad in his record; we only refer to the frailties that proclaim his kinship with fallen humanity.

Dr. Smith has rendered the church an invaluable service in the preparation of this work. It ought to have an immense circulation both North and South. Every preacher should have it; but its sale should not be among preachers alone. Its general circulation among our people would accomplish good in many ways.

SELECT NOTES. A Commentary on the Sunday-school Lessons for 1896. By F. N. and M. A. Peloubet. Illustrated. Cloth, $1.25. W. A. Wilde & Co., Boston.

Every student appreciates the pleasure and profitableness of having within easy reach and in condensed form accurate information, striking illustrations, and convincing arguments regarding any subject that he may be studying. It is because the Select Notes furnishes all this regarding every Sunday-school lesson that it has become the most popular book of its class in the world. The work improves from year to year, and the issue for 1897 stands at the head of the list of works of its class.

We congratulate the author, the publishers, and the Sunday-school world for the book, the annual issuance of which marks a distinctive, appreciable increase of knowledge regarding the Book of all books.

In the Living Present

The Outlook assures that the majority of Protestant Churches in our country use unfermented wine at the Lord's Supper. In Great Britain, specially in Scotland, the innovation secured foothold. The paper alluded to believes that this proves the growth of the temperance sentiment. This is a world of warring opinions.

Rev. Frank B. Vreeman has been deposed by the Presbytery of Illinois. Is declared a heretic. His statement, ambiguous and confusing, when sifted, reveals the sad fact that he does not believe in the divinity of Christ, original sin or hell. Recently he said that the churches of our day suffer from a plethora of theology, but are devoid of religion. Dr. Dixon, of New York, has selected him as his assistant. The former desires, as evangelist, to visit other large cities for purposes of introducing his new gospel.

A Chicago newspaper, Labor, finds relief in expectorating thuswise: "We are charged with begetting hate. What if we do? We hate, abhor the present state of society. Employers are tyrants, a bloody plutocracy. Our Republic is a huge humbug. Not the Constitution—the dollar rules. What, recommend humility and submission? No. To do that is the business of those paid hypocrites called clergymen. But the rotten fabric, known as society, a vile despotism, will soon be swept away. Powder and dynamite will do it." 'Tis said that dogs which bark don't bite.

The Parliament of Transvaal has forbidden importation and fabrication of alcoholic beverages. President Paul Kruger recommended such law. Though the former license system had been very remunerative to the state, "prohibition" was nevertheless introduced. We think that the Boers will find in the end that the seeming loss is actual gain.

The City Council of New York is about to adopt a curfew law, requiring all children less than sixteen years of age, unaccompanied by parents or guardians, to be at home at eight o'clock at night. The public bells will designate the time. Transgressors to be arrested and punished. A similar law in other large cities would be well. Much of our rowdyism is among our young folks. Their noisy demonstrations in our public streets at night indicates that they are training for hoodlumism.

On Nov. 15 Dr. R. S. Starrs celebrated his golden jubilee as pastor of the Church of the Pilgrims, in Brooklyn. On that date he was pastor of that church for fifty consecutive years. He was, on that occasion, the recipient of much congratulation. Presents costly and numerous. Reception and concert. The people elated. It is said that the Doctor's sermons are now as vivacious as they were fifty years ago. He is respected and loved.

The new Lord Mayor of London, Alderman Faudel-Philips, is an Israelite. Within twenty-five years he is the fourth of that race who occupied that position. A wonderful people, those Jews! Since Haman's time they suffered much persecution and oppression, but with all that wealth and honor have always come to them in superabundance.

Gleanings from the Texas Advocate.

Rev. C. Briscoe Carter has been stationed for the next Conference year at Pottsboro, Texas.

Rev. George C. Rankin has been transferred from the Texas to the North Texas Conference, and stationed at First Church, Dallas.

At the recent session of the North Texas Conference, at Paris, Rev. W. H. Hughes preached by invitation a semi-centennial sermon, which is highly spoken of.

The North Texas Conference at its recent session was so crowded that the Bishop found it necessary to transfer a number of men who had been transferred to it from other Conferences. It became necessary also to reconsider the vote by which four men had been admitted on trial.

Speaking of Bishop Keener's sermon at the North Texas Conference, at Paris, the Texas Advocate says: "Bishop Keener's masterly sermon was a feast of fat things. God spoke through him to mortal men."

NOTES.

Dr. Leftwich's sermon on Sunday morning was a masterpiece. It will be published in full in our next week's issue.

The Leftwich meeting at Carondelet closed on Monday night, and the Doctor left Tuesday morning for his home in Nashville. The meeting resulted in more than forty conversions and ten accessions to the church. At least as many more will be received in the near future. Much good was done that can not be stated in statistical form. Many Christian people have been lifted to a higher plane of spiritual life.

There is no reason why the same rules of politeness that prevail in the drawing-room should not be exercised in the church, as far as consideration for others is concerned. It is comparatively a small thing to show a little kindness to a stranger; but to the recipient it means much and goes far toward turning into a means of spiritual blessing a service that might have been marred and rendered unprofitable by an act of discourtesy.—Christian Herald.

Sir Benjamin Ward Richardson, one of the most renowned physicians of the age, died at his home in London on the twenty-first. In spite of the exactions of a laborious practice he found time to write voluminously on various scientific subjects connected with his profession. He was an ardent advocate of total abstinence from everything that intoxicates. His writings on this subject have been of incalculable service to the temperance cause. His death will be deeply deplored throughout the civilized world.

The First M. E. Church, of Harriman, Tenn., has split on the prohibition question. Some time since a movement was started in that church to require all candidates for membership to pledge themselves not to vote for parties or men who refuse to declare themselves in favor of prohibition. A quarrel followed, of course. Feelings ran high for weeks. The contest came to an end a few days since when a vote was taken which resulted in favor of the conservatives. The radicals have seceded, and will at once organize a new church. It is said that the seceders have nearly all the paying members. For the above facts we are indebted to the Holston Methodist.

Conflict.

Paul understood woll that the Christian life is one of positive and prolonged conflict. He spoke of it as "a warfare," and compared it with the Olympic games. He recognized that it meant a furious battle with self. "So fight I," said he, "not as beating the air: but I beat black and blue my body, and bring it into subjection." He tells of "a thorn in the flesh, a minion of Satan sent to buffet him." He was a man strong in thought and in purpose, and such men always find self very assertive and difficult to control. Paul knew more thoroughly, I think, than most men that Christianity means a conflict with self.

Then outside of self, the great wide world, where sin has run riot and sown wreck and ruin for sixty centuries, ten thousand forms of opposition meet the Christian. Temptations that lure, temptations that threaten, temptations that come suddenly, temptations that press persistently, temptations bold and defiant and outspoken, and temptations that hide their real nature often under the guise of some virtue, make up a mighty army of opposition.

Back of self and its downward dragging, back of the world's varied-hued army of tempters, as the inspirer and director of all, is that fallen spirit, most malign and cunning, the devil, with an indefinite host of like spirits, subordinate devils. The conflict is a very positive one.

It is not at all to the discredit of Christianity that it involves conflict. It is a fact in nature everywhere that what is worth much costs much.

"God gives no value unto men,
Unmatched by meed of labor;
And Cost has everywhere and ever been Worth's closest neighbor:
. . . . . .
All common good has common price,
Exceeding good exceeding—
Christ bought the keys of Paradise
With cruel bleeding."

A life that costs nothing—a life of drifting instead of rowing, a life without toil and conflict—is not worth living. Men always drift downward, darkward, hellward; it requires rowing to move up the stream of life toward worth and heaven; and he who fails to "toil in rowing" will inevitably drift.

Really it is a very blessed thing that our religion does involve toil and conflict. The arms that are never used are weak and worthless; the brain that is never taxed is not capable of a thought worth thinking: so the soul that has no conflict never develops any strength of faith or hope or love. However spotless the baby-like purity of such a soul, if it fails to fight the battles of faith and endeavor, it will soon become foul with the decay of its own once lordly powers. It is nature's law everywhere—the law of spirit as well as matter; it is God's own great law of life in all worlds, for angels as well as men.

They first must battle who would reign."

Presiding Elders' Districts.

While the brethren have been writing on the question of reducing the number of presiding elders' districts in the North Mississippi Conference, I have been studying both sides of the question, and now I desire to submit the following: Let us have two districts with 20 appointments each, two with 12, four with 15, and one with 16. This will give opportunity of comparing the practical workings of the large, the small and the intermediate-size districts. W. C. HARRIS.

Hon. A. S. Clay.

I am inexpressibly happy this evening. The Hon. A. S. Clay, the Senator-elect to succeed the Hon. John B. Gordon, is one of the dearest friends of my life. We spent nearly three years at Hiwassee College together, studied the same lessons, members of the same literary society, and part of the time were room-mates. We were both poor boys, and knew how to sympathize with each other. We graduated in the same class, and twenty-one years ago separated at Cleveland, Tenn.—Clay en route for his native State, and the writer to his native State.

During our stay at college we never had a misunderstanding. Our friendship to-day is as fresh as it was twenty-one years ago. Many times while getting our lessons in Horace or Homer, Clay would say, "Cooper, I am going to the United States Senate or die trying." At the age of forty-four my friend—the poor struggling college boy—who was the soul of honor, has attained to the goal of his earthly ambition. Clay is an enthusiastic Methodist.

Noble son of the South! We are shedding tears while we think of you; but they are tears of joy!

Church Dedication.

A beautiful day and a large congregation greeted Dr. C. W. Carter on Nov. 15, when he delivered us a fine sermon on the origin, the doctrines and the polity of Methodism. The church, a fine frame house—nicely ceiled and seated—with a neat pulpit, altar, and bell, was then solemnly dedicated to the worship of Almighty God.

This is the first church built by our people in West Feliciana for many years. It is an ornament and an honor to that community. Situated near Star Hill postoffice, about five miles from Bayou Sara, it is easily accessible from most places in that parish.

An elegant dinner was provided for all present on the grounds, after which Dr. Carter gave us a close, practical, fervent discourse concerning "The Son of man coming to seek and to save the lost." A marriage in the presence of a large congregation at night and another sermon served to fill out the day, and all together it proved to be a day we hope of much profit, and certainly very interesting to all who attended.

From Bro. McIntosh.

We are now at Fayette, Mo., in the midst of a great meeting. Fayette is one of the strongest charges in the Conference. It is called the Jerusalem of Missouri Methodism. Rev. T. E. Sharp is in charge of the station, and he is one of the strongest young preachers of the State. We are trying hard to get through so as to be able to meet the brethren at Greenville, Miss. Our meeting at Mess Point, Miss., was a big success. The church was greatly blessed; however, there were not very many sinners converted and joined the church. Nearly all the unconverted were brought into the church last year, and there were very few left for us. The congregations were large, though the nights were dark, and it rained from the time we got there till we left; but I suppose it has stopped since the election. Bro. T. W. Adams is our pastor there, and he is one of the most useful preachers we have in the Mississippi Conference. He and his lovely family have greatly endeared themselves to the good people of the city. He is now finishing up his fourth year, and happy is that people who may secure him another year as their pastor. The membership in Mess Point has been more than doubled during his pastorate, and he will certainly leave it in good condition for his successor. Mess Point is one of the most lovely places I have visited in five years, and that preacher may congratulate himself who may be assigned to that charge.

I hope to meet you at Conference.

Indian Mission and Thanksgiving Day.

To the Friends of Indian Mission in Mississippi:

Dear Brethren and Sisters: We are subject to lose our Indian Mission for which we have paid about $225, if we do not pay the balance due, about $150, between this and Dec. 25. It is a valuable property to the church, and we can not afford to lose it.

Now, let me suggest how we may save it. Next Thursday, Nov. 26—Thanksgiving Day—let every lover of the mission and of our dear Lord make a thank-offering for the mission and send amount to me at once. Report from Grenada District.

I think writing a missionary report is like going to Sunday-school. When we have good lessons we enjoy going; if not, we go with a sort of dread.

I take pleasure in trying to give you something from the Grenada district, because we are making progress. Our people are more imbued with the spirit of missions, and appreciate their work as never before. The annual reports are asked for and read, the meetings better attended, the dues easier collected, the thank-offerings larger and given more cheerfully.

I pledged at Tupelo one hundred and twenty new members for Grenada district. I'm so glad to report eighty-five of that number secured. Three new societies organized, and an increase in the number of Advocates and Little Workers taken. We feel very much blessed in having Sister Hargrove, our honored president, with us, and she is doing a fine work for missions at the college. Nearly every girl is a member of the society, and they have pledged forty dollars for a scholarship. Who can estimate the result of such training?

We are now preparing to send an Xmas box to our Miss Blackburn in Mexico, each juvenile society contributing. How glad the children are to work if they only have help and encouragement! My heart has been so pained when at different places I've found bright, willing children, but no one to lead them. Oh, if our women were only willing! God has promised to supply all our needs if we are only "willing."

We had with us, last Sunday, Mrs. J. P. Campbell, returned missionary and field secretary. I wish so much the whole church could hear her. So vivid are her descriptive powers you feel as if you were in China, and her appeals to the home church so earnest one feels as if very little has been done, and yet comes a real longing to improve every opportunity in the future. It is not surprising that she has accomplished so much in China, so full of the Holy Ghost, and so richly endowed with mind and will. May she live to see the desire of her heart fulfilled! "China for Christ!"

Our secretary, Mrs. Truehart, is pleading for greater effort this quarter. The expenditures were several thousand dollars more than were received. Let's pray more, give more, and claim more of our heavenly Father. He will reward if we are only faithful.

MRS. W. M. MCINTOSH,
Sec'y Grenada District.

Our Machine Offer.

New Improved High-Arm "Arlington B" Self-Threading Sewing Machine.

A recorded certificate of warranty for 10 years accompanies each machine. The "Arlington B" is complete in every detail, combining all modern and late improvements, such as automatic bobbin winder, self-threading shuttle, self-setting needle, upper spring tension, etc

The "Arlington B" self-threading sewing machine has a large high-arm, its mechanical appearance is perfect, its adjustment is absolute, positive take up, convenient foot-rest, with the best style furniture, either oak or walnut; in addition to which each machine is furnished with the best steel combination attachments free, as follows: One tucker, one foot ruffler, one set of plain hemmers (five different widths up to seven-eighths of an inch), one binder, one shirring plate and one needle-braider, packed in a handsome velvet lined case. It is also furnished with one foot hemmer, one screw driver, one wrench, one oil can with oil, one gauge, one package of needles, six bobbins and one instruction book.

THE HEAD is strong and substantial; has large space under the arm for handling bulky goods, is finely japanned, and protected by a hard finish. Has so few bearings and friction points that it is easily oiled and kept clean.

NEEDLE BAR is round, with adjustable bearings polished and fitted, insuring great wear, and can run a long time without oiling. It has a slack dip motion, relieving the strain upon the thread when the shuttle is passing through the loop. Using the adjustable take-up, controlling the threads perfectly on all grades of work.

IMPROVED AUTOMATIC BOBBIN WINDER which is so positive and reliable in its action that an imperfectly wound bobbin is an impossibility. So simple that a child can easily operate it. This valuable attachment renders possible a perfect control of shuttle tension.

SELF-THREADING—THE "ARLINGTON B" is self-threading, requiring no change from light to heavy work. Uses double thread, and makes the lock stitch.

THE NEEDLE is the same as used on the New Home machine, and is self-setting both as to height and position with reference to shuttle, with short blade and long shank, insuring great strength; finely polished.

SELF-THREADING SHUTTLE—A perfect steel cylinder shuttle with delicate and perfect tension, open at one end to allow the bobbin to be inserted without displacing any of the parts; runs loose in the shell without spring centre or point bearings, thus insuring an even tension; can be threaded in the dark, and easily understood.

LOOSE PULLEY for winding the bobbin without running the machine requires no change or adjustment, nor is it necessary to remove the work from the machine.

PARTS SUBJECT TO WEAR are made of the finest steel, case hardened, light and noiseless and are very durable.

OUR OFFER.

To anyone, not now a subscriber to this paper, who will send us $20.50, we will send the machine and the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE one year. To old subscribers we make the following offer: Pay your subscription to April, '98, and send us $18.50 additional, and we will send you the machine.

We allow purchaser to test the machine for ten days. If at the end of ten days you are not satisfied, you have only to drop us a postal card, and your money will be refunded.

TO AGENTS:

We will send this machine free to any preacher or other person who will send us twenty new subscribers with the cash—$40.

Rev. Frederic R. Marvin, long time pastor of the First Congregational Church, of Great Barrington, Mass., and at one time a practicing physician, a graduate of the College of Physicians and Surgeons, New York, says of Ripans Tabules: "The formula has long been in favor with medical men, and the method of preparation in the present form is modern and a great convenience. I always keep a vial of the Tabules upon my dressing table, and use them with confidence whenever occasion arises. For a disturbed condition of the digestive organs I know of nothing so good, and for an 'all-round' family remedy I do not believe there is anything better to be had."

HOME CIRCLE.

NOT OURS THE VOWS.

BY BERNARD B. BYRON.

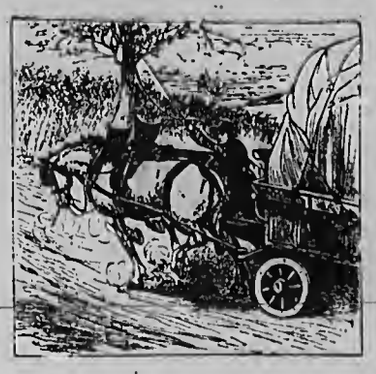
Not ours the vows of such as plight
Their troth in sunny weather,
While leaves are green, and skies are bright,
To walk on flowers together.

But we have loved as those who tread
The thorny path of sorrow,
With clouds above, and cause to dread
Yet deeper gloom to-morrow.

That thorny path, those stormy skies,
Have drawn our spirits nearer;
And rendered us, by sorrow's ties,
Each to the other dearer.

Love born in hours of joy and mirth,
With mirth and joy may perish;
That to which darker hours gave birth
Still more and more we cherish.

It looks beyond the clouds of time,
And through death's shadowy portal;
Made by adversity sublime,
By faith and hope immortal.



Stick to It and Do It.

Set a stout heart to a stiff hill, and the wagon will get to the top of it. There's nothing so hard but a harder thing will get through it; a strong job can be managed by a strong resolution. Have at it and have it. Stick to it and succeed. Till a thing is done men wonder that you think it can be done, and when you have done it they wonder it was never done before.

I would have every man who wants to make his way in life pull as if all depended on himself. Very little is done right when it is left to other people. The more hands to do work the less there is done. One man will carry two pails of water for himself; two men will only carry one pail between them. A child with several mothers will die before it runs alone. Know your business and give your mind to it, and you will find a buttered loaf where a sluggard loses his last crust.

In these times it's no use being a farmer if you don't mean work. The days are gone by for gentlemen to make a fortune off of a farm by going out shooting half their time. If foreign wheats keep on coming in, farmers will soon learn that "He who by the plough would thrive, Himself must either hold or drive."

He is a sorry dog who wants game and will not hunt for it: let us never lie down in idle despair, but follow on till we succeed.

Rome was not built in a day, nor much else, unless it be a dog kennel. Things which cost no pains are slender gains. Where there has been little sweat there will be little sweet. Jonah's gourd came up in a night, but then it perished in a night.—Spurgeon.

Walking on the Sunny Side.

We were walking along that chilly Autumn morning on the shady side of the street, when my friend said: "How foolish we are to stay on this side when we can so easily cross over and be in the sun." Our wraps, which were too light for the shady side, were just heavy enough for the warmer one, and the genial sun and its brightness shining on us made us feel like different persons. Our blood, that had been chilled, was warmed and gave us a comfortable feeling and a brighter outlook on the work we were hastening to do. All the world seemed akin to us.

Thinking of that delightful change so soon and so easily made, it seemed strange that any of us will ever walk on the shady side when we can cross over and get into the sun. We allow ourselves to fill some of our days with chilly gloom, and nurse the ills incident upon such an atmosphere, when by a little trouble and thought we might get ourselves into the sunshine.

Every home should face the Father's house; it should be built and managed so that the glorious shining of the light of his kingdom could lighten every heart in it. But poor, short-sighted mortals that we are, we build it too often without thinking of the Great Architect's plan to always have the living rooms so arranged that the brightest outlook can be obtained. We all largely depend on atmospheric influences for our health and happiness. A dark, cool, rainy day makes us feel, as the little girl said, "sort of shivery and drizzling all over," and atmospheric disturbances in the home make us even worse conditioned. Sometimes an unpleasantness come into the family circle; we nurse the grievance, sit in the shade, and brood over it; we are chilled to the very core of our hearts, and unfitted for the proper discharge of our duties in consequence. Probably a few hours after we wonder how we could have been so upset over so trivial a matter, for when these grievances are taken to pieces and analyzed we find that they really had nothing in them to cause such a disturbance.

At such a time do not let us allow ourselves to sit in the shade and lose one precious hour of the new day God has given; let us rather ask him for this his grace and help, then put our hands in his and walk into the sunshine. What if concessions must be made; let us make them. Life is too short to nurse grievances; let us make the dear ones happy while we may.

But sometimes the gloom settles over our hearts because of a real sorrow. A loved one is called from our home circle who will never come back to us in this life; there is a vacant chair at the table, we miss the loved face that smiled on us at morning, and the cheery voice that spoke sweet words to us. That is a real trouble, we say; how can the sorrowing heart then get into the sunshine, and the work of life be taken up again with strength of purpose? We sit in the gloom and shadow of our grief, and seemingly forget that the dear one has crossed over into the sunshine of the life eternal.

"Why do you cry, little boy?" asked the old German pastor, as the child stood by the side of the good old grandfather's silent form. "Grandfather has only gone home to his Father's home; he is glad to be there in the sunshine and rest and peace of the fatherland. Go to your work, my boy, and be glad for grandfather that he is home at last."

So let us all pray each day to be led over to the sunny side of life; and walking there ourselves, our little ones will cling to our gowns, or hold our hands and learn how to walk there with us. Point out to them the flowers that are growing along life's wayside, and so make them see beauties they otherwise might have missed. Bid them listen to the sweet music of the birds, and if there be a bit of hard road, show them how to pass over with careful feet and not with grumbling spirit, because there is always much of beautiful greenery in the line of our travel to make up for the bits of dreary wastes. Dear friends, young and old, make the journey on the sunny side of the road.—Susan Teall Perry, in The Evangelist.

"Abused" People.

Of all disagreeable people to live with, the "abused" man or woman is the most trying, and the lot of one doomed to such association is anything but enviable—always on the alert for slights or neglect, so very sensitive as to imagine the condemnation of any act or circumstance an indirect thrust at themselves; crushed if their friends presume to look through other spectacles than theirs, and jealous if their full confidence is not in all instances bestowed, although they think nothing of betraying that confidence.

Sadly enough this trait is sometimes fostered in the most unexpected places, even in the Christian home, where selfishness and distrust should find no resting place. There is a certain mother who thus makes her home almost unendurable for herself and family. Although there is no doubt of her love for her children, yet possessing and indulging this unhappy disposition, and demanding the respect and confidence of which she has never shown herself worthy, she blights her home with complaints of the slights and injuries which she has suffered.

How foolishly we train ourselves for the work of life! We give our most arduous and eager efforts to the cultivation of those faculties which will serve us in the competitions of the forum and the market-place. But if we were wise, we should care infinitely more for the unfolding of those inward, secret, spiritual powers by which alone we can become the owners of anything that is worth having.

Life at Its Best.

No artist ever puts on his canvas all the beauty of his mental vision. No singer ever gets into the song he sings all the music of his soul. No saintly Christian ever translates into disposition and conduct all the spiritual loveliness that glows in his ideal. Our hands are too clumsy and unskillful to express the best things of our mind and heart in word or act or character. We see the good, but can not do it in more than a mere fragmentary way. Yet the visions of beauty which we have in mere flashes and glimmerings are hints of divine revealings that are yet to be made, and of the wondrous possibilities which lie in the hidden depths of our nature, some day to be brought out. The sea covers great fields of concealed splendors. Now and then a storm stirs its depths, and washes up a few brilliant shells or pebbles, which shine like fragments broken from heaven's walls. Yet these few stones or shells are only specimens of millions more, even more brilliant, that are buried in the ocean depths. So there come out here and there, in a human life in times of special exaltation, glimpses of something rarely beautiful—an act, a word, a self-denial, a disposition, the revealing of some noble quality or some marvelous power or measure of love; and we say as we see it: "That is like Christ. That is a gleam of heavenly life. That is a fragment of divinity." But that flashing gleam of character, that glimmering of Christlikeness, that act which seems too pure for earth, is only a hint of the infinite possibilities of each human soul. Hidden in the depths of the nature, under all its faults and imperfections, is a life which far surpasses the highest things that are reached in this world. The love, joy, peace, unselfishness, purity, holiness, attained in the saintliest experience of earthly Christian life, are but divine intimations of what we shall be when the limiting conditions of earth shall have been left behind.

There will be a time when all this hidden life shall be revealed. The bud shall burst into the rich flower. The gem shall break through its rough imprisoning crust and shine in lustrous splendor. The dull character that here shows only gleams and flashes of spiritual beauty, amid manifold defects, flaws, and infirmities, shall yet show in its every feature the beauty of Christ. The holy thoughts, desires, longings, and the hunger after righteousness, which here are hindered, restrained, limited, and which fail to take full form in life and character, shall yet be wrought out in deeds as beautiful and holy as themselves. We shall see Christ, and we shall be like him, when we shall see him as he is.—Dr. J. R. Miller.

Set before you high models. Try to live with the most generous and to observe their deeds. Be contented, yet aspire; that should be the faith of all, and the two are quite compatible.—F. W. Robertson.

We can never see this world in its true light unless we consider our life in it as a state of discipline, a condition through which we are passing to prepare us for another state beyond.—J. W. Alexander.

What the Bible brings to you depends in a large measure on what you bring to it. You may have a crumb, or a loaf, or a granary full to bursting, just as you choose.—Dr. Behrends.

Many Conclusive Considerations

might be cited in favor of a custom of church attendance, but perhaps no prettier phrasing of the true spirit and motive of worship can be afforded than was suggested by the late Oliver Wendell Holmes, who thus explained his own habit of regular church attendance: "There is a little plant called Reverence in the corner of my soul's garden which I love to have watered about once a week."—Exchange.

A man may believe error very sincerely, or he may believe truth very insincerely. In either case his conduct will be wrong. He believes error sincerely when he knows no better, and acts accordingly. He believes the truth insincerely when he acts contrary to his belief.—Rev. J. F. Dyer.

HYGIENE.

Regularity in Eating.

"The stomach requires rest." Do you know that, or is it a mere tradition? Considered as a fine piece of mechanism like your watch, for example—is it not rather for the good of the machine that it be wound up regularly and kept running? What is your watchmaker's advice concerning the time-keeper in your pocket? That the other course will put it out of order, without doubt. But, indeed, the interval between a ten or eleven o'clock lunch and a seven or eight o'clock breakfast is considerably longer than intervenes between either two of the regular daily meals. It is not pretended that a person needs as strong and as much food to sleep by as to work by, but only that the brain shall not be kept awake by the bitter cry—unintelligible, perhaps—of a famished stomach, the grind of organs having nothing but the system to act upon.

After maturity one does not experience the pangs of appetite common to growing youth. The demon of inanition make its presence known through torment of nerves, lassitude, and despondency or despair. The world is in want of the best achievements of best conditions. As said the apostle to the Gentiles, "For this cause many are weak and sickly among you, and many sleep"—their last sleep—who seldom knew the full benefit of nature's sweet restorer. Whether over books printed or books to print, or blank books of accounts, no child, woman or man can long evade the law of demand and supply. Students and brain workers in general must eat to sleep; must sleep to preserve their faculties in tone. The best physicians are treating dyspepsia on the principle of food before medicine. The handwriting on the wall of many a bed chamber, where some man or woman keeps unwilling vigils, points to beefsteak that should be weighed in the balance, but is found wanting.—Exchange.

Late Suppers.

The old tradition that to eat anything just before going to bed was sure to produce indigestion and render sleep impossible is now happily exploded. It is not good, as a matter of fact, to go to bed with the stomach so loaded that the undigested food will render one restless, but something of a light, palatable nature in the stomach is one of the best aids to quietude and rest. The process of digestion goes on in sleep with as much regularity as when one is taking violent exercise to aid it, and so something in the stomach is a very desirable condition for the night's rest. Some physicians have declared, indeed, that a good deal of the prevalent insomnia is the result of an unconscious craving of the stomach for food in persons who have been unduly frightened by the opinion that they must not eat before going to bed, or who have, like many nervous women, been keeping themselves in a state of semi-starvation. Nothing is more agreeable on retiring for the night than to take a bowl of hot broth, oat meal gruel or clam soup. It is a positive aid to nervous people, and induces peaceful slumbers. This is especially the case on cold Winter nights, when the stomach craves warmth as much as any other part of the body. Even a glass of hot milk is grateful to the palate on such occasions, but a light, well-cooked gruel is better, and in our climate, during the cold months of Winter, should be the retiring food of every woman who feels, as many do, the need of food at night.—Canada Lancet.

OBITUARIES.

PARKINSON—FRANKLIN B. PARKINSON was a man familiarly known and deeply loved by a large circle of friends, and trusted in a business community with which he had been long identified. Physical failure, by which he was kept from his accustomed place in the house of God, will make his absence less noted there than would have been the case had his death occurred before most of his contemporaries had passed away. He was born in the city of Natchez, Miss., Sept. 26, 1819, and died of paralysis at his home in New Orleans, Oct. 24, 1896.

In young manhood Mr. Parkinson came to this city, and engaged in commercial business as bookkeeper and cashier in one and another of those substantial and wealthy houses for which New Orleans has been justly noted. He occupied various positions of responsibility, always commanding a confidence which time increased. The later part of his business life was in connection with the Arrow cotton-tie concern, covering in its various developments the whole territory of the Southern States. Mr. Parkinson was here in association with Mr. R. W. Rayne, the founder of the Rayne Memorial Church, and was afterwards a member of the firm of Rayne & Co. The writer had opportunity at this time of knowing Mr. Parkinson in the relation of employer as well as friend. His law of business was to do as he would be done by, and fully did he apply his principles even to his own disadvantage. If it might be truthfully said of any man that he was honest to a fault, that man was F. B. Parkinson.

In the year 1857 Mr. Parkinson wedded Miss Engenia Bodley. Then began a beautiful home life whose days and years "in golden sequence ran." Mrs. Parkinson's mother blessed their abode with her saintly presence and the chrism of her prayers until her triumphant death. Self-sacrifice was the household law, and reproduced itself in the two sons and the daughter God gave them. Only Christ could have given strength to bear up under the strain of parting after thirty-nine years of such companionship; but the widowed heart has found His grace sufficient.

The closing years of his life were spent in the well earned leisure of a restful evening after a toilsome day. Sometimes he grew restive under inactivity. The habit of a life of labor is not easily laid aside. It was always a delight to Mr Parkinson to do a friend service, and one compensation in his retirement was that the power to do so remained his to the end.

The older members of Felicity Street Church—the few who remain with us—will remember Mr. Parkinson as a constant attendant upon the ministry of the gospel from the days of Dr. McTyeire (afterwards Bishop) down to a recent time, when, on account of deafness, he ceased to participate in public worship. The pastors loved him, and he loved them. Doubtless he loved the Savior of men, and had set his house in order for the time of his departure, which he knew to be at hand. Two years intervened between a warning stroke and that from which he died. Those who knew and loved him cherish the confidence that in death he had a righteous man's hope, though failing speech did not admit of spoken assurance.

POUND—Mrs. EDNA POUND, daughter of W. F. and S. P. Sparke, was born Dec. 8, 1870, and died in Nettleton, Lee county, Miss., Sept. 7, 1896, aged twenty-five years nine months and nine days.

She was married to Mr. R. L. Pound, June 27, 1890; joined the M. E. Church, South, in her twelfth year. Sister Pound was devoted to her Bible, and to her church as a consequence. Her pastor's presence at her house gave her great pleasure, and he was made to feel himself at home. Because of ill health she was seldom at church; yet the evening before she passed away she was in the congregation, little thinking possibly that she would so soon pass to the church above. But so it was. In about twenty-four hours after she returned from the public services, and within ten minutes after returning from a walk of several squares, she fell into her mother's arms and expired. Because of her feeble health it is possible she anticipated an early death, and was often heard to say that "death was only going to sleep." It seemed to be the common opinion, and was expressed by some, that "Edna," as she was familiarly called, "was the best woman in the community," and she is missed by us accordingly.

J. C. LOWE, Pastor.

BROWNING—MATTIE KENT, wife of Mr J. Browning, was born in East Baton Rouge parish, La., Aug. 23, 1864, and died Oct. 29, 1896.

She joined the Methodist Church while young, and lived a consistent member thereof. All her life she has been called good. It seemed no effort on her part to fulfill her Christian duties. Words can not add to her short, but bright Christian past; so let the bereaved husband and relatives take comfort therefrom, and strive to meet her in the fair beyond.

A FRIEND.

BOGARD—Little HAZEL HAMILTON BOGARD was born March 1, 1893, and died Oct. 22, 1896, making her just one year seven months and twenty-one days old at her death.

She was a bright, healthy child, and stayed in this world long enough to twine her affections about the hearts of all who knew her. Too young to know aught of evil, and old enough to evince the sweetness and ingenuity of childhood, she took the place of purest thought and feeling in parents, friends, and relatives' lives.

When little children like that are taken the grief is softened by at least two evident facts: All the sorrows, sufferings and dangers of this probationary life are past. It is a great thing to escape all these. The other fact is, that the child is safely housed in the home to which we all hope to come in the end. Jesus called the little children to his arms here, and he certainly will not neglect the parentless little ones of heaven. Up there God is a father, Jesus is a brother, and the angels are associates for our loved ones. Then, dear parents, your little Hazel is not lost, but waits in heaven for you. Grieve no more, but go to her.

"Beautiful hands of a little one—see,
Baby voice calling, O parents, to thee;
Rosy-cheeked darling, the light of our home,
Taken so early is beckoning, Come.
Beautiful, beautiful, beckoning hands
Calling the dear ones to heavenly lands."

J. W. DONMAN.

SINGLETON—CARRIE IDA SINGLETON, aged four years, daughter of Geo. Lea Singleton and Ida Riggs.

Little Carrie was not only the apple of her father's eye, the jewel of her mother's heart, but was loved by all with whom she came in contact, because of her gentle and winsome ways. Verily, "death is no respecter of persons," and God's providence past finding out! She fell asleep in Jesus as calmly and as confidently as an infant in its mother's arms.

Little Carrie has performed her mission on earth. God but loaned her to earth for a season. Her spirit is with God. The cold, inanimate remains lie in the family plot but a few yards from the fireside around which her little voice, attuned to simple melody, was heard. "Mourn not as those that have no hope," brother, sister, relatives; but rather submissively bow under the chastening rod and thy Father's heavenly will. The child can never come to thee, but ye can, by grace divine, go to the child. May God bless all the bereaved ones, and may they meet again where parting is no more! is the fervent prayer of their PASTOR.

STUART—Bro. R. E. A. STUART, ex-Superintendent of Education of Copiah county, departed this life at his home in Martinsville, Sept. 23, 1896. Bro. Stuart was born in Rockbridge county, Va., Feb. 11, 1837, and moved to Mississippi in early manhood, and for many years was a prominent and useful citizen of his adopted State.

He was happily married to Miss Cato, who died a few years ago. Six children blessed their home, five of whom preceded them into eternity. Their only surviving son is a delegate to the Mississippi Conference from the Brookhaven district.

Our brother was faithful in every relation of life. About twenty years ago he united with the Methodist Church, and ever remained a consistent member.

Bro Stuart was an honorable citizen, a warm friend to the poor, a tender husband and father. He was at times an official of his county, and no stain ever rested on his official or private character. He died in the Christian faith, and entered on eternal rest.

I. W. COOPER.

DYER—Little SEWELL, infant son of Lafayette Dyer and Sarah E. Chitle, was born near Woodworth, La., July 6, 1896, and fell on sleep Nov. 5, 1896, at one o'clock P. M. He was one of twins, and the third twin to be lost by Bro. and Sister Dyer within little over a year's time. A father's heart is bruised, a mother's joy is withered. Their treasures perished here in the delicate, fragrant bud; but they have opened to bloom forever in the immortal Eden beyond the horizon of the material universe. As little cherubims, with crowns of gold and raiment of white, they are forever at home with Jesus and the angels, where they, from blissful heights, look down in fond anxiety for the coming of their parents. God, in his all-wise providence, does all things for the best, and if mother and father are faithful, might it not be expected that in the otherwise chill, sad hour of death three bright little angel faces will cheer with their gentle, happy presence their dying bodies, and, with the Lord of hosts, assist in escorting their weary spirits to "that sinless Summer land"?

Catarrh Can Not Be Cured

with LOCAL APPLICATIONS, as they can not reach the seat of the disease. Catarrh is a blood or constitutional disease, and in order to cure it you must take internal remedies. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, and acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces. Hall's Catarrh Cure is not a quack medicine. It was prescribed by one of the best physicians in this country for years, and is a regular prescription. It is composed of the best tonics known, combined with the best blood purifiers, acting directly on the mucous surfaces. The perfect combination of the two ingredients is what produces such wonderful results in curing Catarrh. Send for testimonials, free.

Something Good in Dixie

Please understand I am a woman of Indiana, not of Dixie, but do appreciate this good delight to acknowledge it that all persons afflicted as I have been may know there is hope and happiness for them. I had been a stammerer from childhood; sometimes as unable to speak as though dumb. Had tried several cures, but all of them failed. Then, as a last resort, I tried Rev. G. W. Randolph's Cure for Stuttering or Stammering, and now am CURED. Four days after complying with the requirements of this Cure, I received by mail that which enabled me to talk with 5000 ease and infinite satisfaction, which, to one who endures the affliction as long and severely as I have, is a "warmth of gladness in the soul." I have never seen Rev. Randolph, but have found him to be a man of his word, and is highly recommended in church circles, also by State officials. His Voice School, or Institute, is located at No. 464 Pontiac street, Memphis, Tenn., and to persons going to this school a cure is GUARANTEED. The Cure by mail gives the same happy results. If instructions are carefully followed, which even children can do, and those needing the benefit of this GOOD will find him so considerate in his terms they need not suffer these afflictions longer. Submitted for the sake of the unfortunate.

DOMESTIC.

Instead of celebrating their victory in the usual way, the Republicans of Shelbyville, Ind., determined to distribute potatoes among the poor.

The Duke of Tetuan, Spain's minister of foreign affairs, has cabled to Senor De Lome, minister to the United States at Washington, to protest energetically to the American government against the insult to the Spanish flag in Newcastle, Del., where a local military company carried the Spanish colors from the armory and burned them.

The Board of Managers of the Trades League of Philadelphia has issued to the local exchanges a circular letter embodying a resolution, urging that this is an opportune time to make an endeavor to secure an amendment to the Constitution of the United States making the President ineligible for two successive terms, and extending this term of office to six years.

A proposition contained in the annual report of Major-General Miles, the commanding general of the army, is that the force of enlisted men be so increased that the minimum strength would be at least 35,000 men, or ten thousand in excess of the figure now allowed by law, this force to be raised in the event of emergency to 70,000 men at the discretion of the President.

Some days ago the conference of commercial and transportation interests in this city, which has been considering the ways and means of closing the crevasse in Pass-a-Loutre and improving Southwest Pass, decided that a convention should be held at Washington, D. C., on Dec. 17, 1896, and Captain B. D. Wood, as chairman of a special committee, was instructed to issue the proper call for the convention.

It is said by those who profess to know Major McKinley's views on the subject of patronage, that he will move slowly in the matter of appointments, and is not likely to disturb the Cleveland appointees before the expiration of their four years' term. He will endeavor to build up the influence of the Republican party in the Southern States by choosing substantial business men rather than politicians for the more important offices.

Although a complete and reliable tabulation of the result of the recent elections for congressmen has not yet been made up, enough is known to be able to fix the relative strength of the parties in the Fifty fifth Congress with reasonable accuracy. The latest estimates place the strength of the Republicans in the House at 207; of the Democrats at 137, and that of the Populists at 13. The Republicans will, therefore, have a majority over all others of 57 votes. While the Republicans have a large enough majority in the House of Representatives to pass any measures they see fit, whether purely partisan or not, they will control the Senate by so narrow a margin, if, indeed, they control it at all, that it will be practically impossible to enact purely partisan legislation into law, should the minority prove active and aggressive.

Sabbath Observance.

The Cumberland Presbytorian Synod, in session at Corinth, Oct. 31, declared as follows concerning Sabbath observance:

"Standing by the Christian Sabbath means standing by American institutions. The lowering of the standard of Sabbath observance is dishonoring to God and destructive to the best interests of the human race. The quiet, orderly observance of the Sabbath would bring to us, as a nation, a greater prosperity than we have ever known in our history. It would lead to the general elevation of the morals of the nation and of the individual citizen.

"The desecrators of the Sabbath stand in the front ranks of the foes of the State and of the Church of Christ.

"To aid the morbid spirit of money-getting, so prevalent and aggressive these days, our government runs its postoffices on the Sabbath day. Sunday papers run their presses. Railroads run their trains, and many of the great corporate industries carry on their work, invading the sanctity of divine right in that day, and setting the example of disobedience to God's law, and inviting upon our nation the wrath of an offended God, and setting in motion the processes of education which tend inevitably to undermine all love and respect for any law, human or divine, and eventually overthrow and destroy our government.

"That we deplore the utter disregard for the Sabbath by so many corporations in the running of trains, steamboats, furnaces, shops, mills, etc., on the Sabbath day, and compelling their men to work on that day or to lose their places.

"That 'we heartily commend all Sunday legislation designed to protect the Christian Sabbath as a day of rest and worship.' Such legislation has nothing to do with religious requirements. Laws of this kind simply provide for the observance of the day so far as ceasing from ordinary work and unseemly recreations are concerned. From the civil standpoint the results of such laws are the protection of the laborer in the enjoyment of the right to Sabbath rest from the greed of the employer who desires to rob him of it; the promotion of public health, comfort, happiness, cleanliness and self-respect; the opportunity to secure the benefits of religious instruction in church and Sabbath-school, which constitute the higher education of the masses; the promotion of temperance; the spirit of obedience to law, and the increasing of the number of Christian homes, which are the graduating schools of good citizens and the bulwark of the State.

"The Sabbath issue, as it now stands before the people of the United States, is the issue between the Sabbath of the Bible and the Continental Sunday—the seventh-day holiday of Continental Europe—which has been the scourge of the home, of the laboring men, and of every true interest of men for centuries in European countries, and from which thoughtful statesmen and philanthropists are to-day striving to deliver the people. Shall we have the one or the other? This issue is largely one of civil law."

The Synod directed its permanent Committee on the Sabbath to take such steps as may be necessary to secure a united and simultaneous effort on the part of the different denominations of Christians in the State of Mississippi to get up a mammoth petition to the Legislature of the State to enact laws to stop the running of all freight trains on the Sabbath day, and all unnecessary travel and traffic on the Sabbath day in the State. Rev. J. L. Cooper, Rev. J. W. Caldwell and Hon. J. J. McClelland, West Point, Miss., are the committee.

The Synod earnestly desires that the different denominations of Christians take hold of this matter and vigorously carry it forward. It would be well if the Sabbath committees of the various denominations could meet and prepare the petition and arrange jointly for the entire work.

What a wonderful illustration would this be of the real unity of churches of Christ! In such practical work as this for the kingdom of Christ will be reached the complete fulfillment of his prayer that all his people may be one.

Three Years Ago.

C. W. KNANER WAS CURED OF CHRONIC CATARRH—HIS CURE REMAINS PERMANENT.

C. W. Knaner, Sheldon, Iowa, writes as follows: "I had been troubled with catarrh for over two years; so bad at last that I could not work but two or three days in a week. I tried two doctors without any relief. At times I was so bad that I could not hear. After using nine bottles of Pe-ru-na I was completely cured and believe Pe-ru-na will do all you claim if the directions are followed. I heartily recommend it to all who are afflicted with catarrh. I should call my cure lasting, for I have been working in an elevator for three years (among the dirt and dust of wheat)."

No greater test could be made of any cure, than three years' exposure to the dust and dirt of a grain elevator. This letter is a sample of those we receive daily. They come unsolicited and unrewarded. They express the sentiments of the writer in words that are direct and forcible.

A book on catarrh will be sent to any address by The Pe-ru-na Drug Manufacturing Company, Columbus, Ohio.

"Presiding Elders' Districts."

One of the best articles that has appeared in the ADVOCATE on "Presiding Elders' Districts," etc., is from the pen of Dr. Hunnicutt. But the Doctor, to my mind, had as well left out one sentence: "One brother actually calculated the cost to the church of each sermon of a presiding elder, and by a huge blunder in his figures doubtless provoked a large part of this discussion."

For my part I have been much pained by some things that have been written, and I write to give to the world my unqualified endorsement of every word of commendation that Prof. R. W. Jones and Bro. Sanders have written of this same layman who made such "a huge blunder."

There is no man living truer to Southern Methodism and her preachers than J. B. Streater. I have never known one in all my ministry more liberal than he. Then, my brethren, let us let up on Bro. S., and confine ourselves to the discussion of the subject in hand. Should we increase or diminish the number of presiding elders' districts in our Annual Conferences? As for North Mississippi Conference, my judgment is that we ought to diminish them in number. Let us have only seven instead of nine districts. Each district will then have twenty appointments; the maximum allowed. Then let us ask the next General Conference to pass a law that the presiding elder's support shall be provided for in this way: If there are ten appointments in his district, let him have one-tenth of what is paid in on each pastoral charge; if there are twenty appointments, one-twentieth; and so, in like manner, if there should be sixty or eighty appointments, one-sixtieth or one-eightieth. Some brother would say that would never do; look at the traveling expenses of the presiding elder, how heavy they are! This I grant you; but let the Conference Board of Missions appropriate a certain amount to each presiding elder's district to cover his traveling expenses.

This arrangement, to my mind, would be productive of good in more than one way. It would do away with the temptation that presents itself sometimes to Boards of Stewards to assess for the preacher in charge an amount larger than they ever calculate to pay, simply because they think the Board of District Stewards have assessed them too much for the support of the presiding elder. In the second place, the office would then oftener be seeking for the man, and not the man the office. In the third place, it would be an equalization of salaries. The presiding elder would share alike with all the brethren, and we would all feel there was more of community of interest.

Then I think the office should be filled with true and tried men. Men of mature years and judgment. Men who would command respect and true Christian love in the pulpit and in the social circle.

Lastly, I think he should be retired when he becomes too mature, and some one else be allowed to share in the glory and the hardships of the office.

CHRIST'S TESTIMONIES.

SUNDAY, NOV. 29—THE PRIVILEGE AND BLESSING OF TESTIFYING TO CHRIST.

(Luke i, 8-9)

During the month our attention has been directed to testimonies given by Christ (1) to himself, (2) to his Father, (3) to the Holy Spirit, (4) to his disciples; and now we notice the testimony given to Christ by his disciples: "And ye also shall bear witness, because ye have been with me from the beginning." (John xvi, 27.)

We give this week an abridgment of "Thoughts on the Topic," by Rev. J. J. Ransom, A. M., copied from the (Nashville) Christian Advocate:

Our topic text is found in our Lord's commission to the twelve apostles when he sent them forth. (Matt. x, Luke xii.) It enjoins in the strongest terms the duty of confessing Christ, and denounces in equally strong terms the denial of the Master by a craven or a time-serving spirit.

I.—CONFESSION.

The enemies of our Lord attached as high an estimate to the confession of him as did he himself. (John ix, 22.) The early church grasped firmly the necessity of an open confession, as is clearly shown in the Epistles. (Rom. x, 9; xiv, 2; Phil. ii, 11; I John iv, 15.) This confession was the open avowal of faith in Jesus, and of acceptance of him as the Messiah, the Son of God, the Savior of men, and whatever else his claims might be understood to mean or human necessity to require. It was that solemn act by which the human soul expressed to men its personal surrender to Jesus as Lord and Master.

II.—DENIAL.

The denial of Christ is, perhaps, more always than the simple refusal to accept him. Peter's bitterly lamented fall stands as a type of denial. (Luke xxii, 54-62, etc.) In those dark days on which the church fell during the persecutions, many, through fear of what men might do, were led to deny the Master; and there are in existence copies of certificates of denial that were issued by officials to such poor souls as a protection from future arrest.

III.—HEAVENLY CONSEQUENCES.

Christ assures the disciples that confession or denial of him will be noted by his Father in heaven, and rewarded or punished. We are to be very careful not to understand this threatening to be the result of pique, or resentment in any narrow sense. The deepest truth is that the confession or denial of Christ is decisive of character, and that by virtue of this a man gravitates to his own place in the sight of God.

A Discovery by a Preacher.

A discovery has been made by Rev. J. W. Blosser, M. D., of Atlanta, Ga., which marks a new era in the treatment of Catarrh, Bronchitis, Catarrhal Deafness, Asthma, etc., of which he has made a special study for the last twenty years. The remedy is applied in a practical way, which brings it in direct contact with every affected spot. It destroys the disease germs or microbes, and makes a radical cure. Its use is convenient and pleasant. He desires to place it in the hands of every sufferer, and will mail a trial sample free to everyone who will address Dr. J. W. Blosser & Son, 12 and 13 Grant Building, Atlanta, Ga.

There can be no doubting that the Spanish government is making a supreme effort to crush the Cuban rebellion during the present Winter. Owing to the fact that President Cleveland has not seen fit to recognize the belligerency of the Cubans, the Spaniards feel that there is a reasonable certainty that the status quo, as far as the intervention of this country is concerned, will be permitted to remain undisturbed for the rest of the term of the present administration. But as to the next administration, after March 4, the question is in doubt.

A Christmas Trip.

The thousands of Texans who came from the South Atlantic States find much pleasure in reverting to the happy days of long ago when they were children, and often they awake at night to recall those scenes of yore which gave to life a charm, and which now come in later years as visions of joy. There is a tender spot in every heart for the old home, and the memories which cluster about the dear old spot are solaces in the weary, weary struggle we make day by day to build in our new Eldorado a home to which our children in future time will turn, as we turn now to the old place where our loved ones in the evening of life await the final summons.

The Texas and Pacific Railway Company again offers you the opportunity to go "back to the old home." Round-trip excursion tickets will be on sale from all points on the system on Dec. 21 and 22, 1896, to points in the Southeastern States, at one fare for the round trip, tickets good 30 days from date of sale. See your nearest ticket agent for further information, and do not fail to send eight cents postage to the undersigned for a copy of the finest publication on Texas ever issued, to show to your friends at home.

Christianity Is Love.

BY REV. W. M. LEFTWICH, D. D.

"By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another."—John xiii, 35.

Christianity is not a system of philosophy, but a system of love. Its Author is the fountain of love. Its doctrines are the truths of love. Its principles are the rules of love. Its precepts are the requirements of love. Its promises are the assurances of love. Its threatenings are the severities of love. Its phrases are the songs of love. Its works are the evidences of love. Its gospel is the history of love. Its cross is the sacrifice of love. Its heaven is the reward and fruition of love. For God is love. The church, the body of Christ, is the incarnation of love. Love is its life. Love is its law. Love is its language. Love is its light. The only significance of the church is the significance of love. Love is the badge of discipleship. "By this shall all men know that ye are," etc. Love is not only the badge of discipleship, but it is the test of fidelity and law of exclusion in the kingdom of God. "If a man says he loves God and hateth his brother, he is a liar." So that by this test and testimony he that professes to be a disciple, and is not distinguished by love for his brother, is a pretender, an imposter, a hypocrite, a liar. He whose life is not sweetened and sanctified by love is not a disciple, and can not see the kingdom of God. Love is opposed to selfishness, and hatred, and anger, and wrath, and malice. Sin is enmity against God, enmity against love. Sin blasted Eden, dragged its once sinless occupants down into a wilderness of thorns and thistles, brambles and briars, and not content, but still pursuing, it drove love and peace and hope and happiness from the hearts and homes of men. The presence of sin is strife, not love. Its fruits are anger, wrath, malice, blasphemy, and all manner of filthy communications; but God's Son, the gift of God's love, of the Incarnate love (for love is the incarnation of the Son of God), came into the world to show us how the Father loved his prodigal children, to make the statement of his Father's love in the history of his own humiliation, suffering and death as a "Man of sorrows and acquainted with grief," to show us how God loves sinners, to make the statement in the history of the gospel as the history of his Incarnate love, and to show us how that God came into the world in the person of his Son because he so loved the world, to destroy the works of the devil, to destroy sin, enmity, and hatred, and malice, and rebellion, and teach us how to love. He came that we might have life, and have it more abundantly; that we might have love, and have it more abundantly. It is eternal life to know him. It is salvation to trust him. It is the fulfillment of the law to love him. It is anathema maranatha not to love him. I infer, therefore, that love translated into character is moral life; that perfect love is perfect moral life. Without love there is no moral life. Sin is enmity. Enmity is moral death. Holiness is love, and love is moral life. To love God with the heart, soul, mind and strength, and your neighbor as yourself, is and its fulfillment is perfect love, and perfect love is perfect moral life. Now, we can reach the same point on another track. Love is a word of many meanings or degrees. Its lowest and first is animal love, and consists simply in the animal appetites and animal passions, animal desires. It has in it no moral quality. It belongs to the brute.

The second is animal love in man, that is gratified with what he can eat, and what he can drink, and wherewithal he can be clothed, and the moral life of some men rises very little higher than that. Another degree of love is the ruling passion in man, that which dominates a man's life and determines his character. You tell me what passion dominates your life, and I can tell you what your character is. If you are dominated by love of self, your character is selfish. If it be love of gold, your character is sordid. If it be love of fame, your character is ambitious. Then we rise to the realm of social affairs, and we have conjugal love, maternal love, filial love, which come of our relation to each other, in which the religious element is largely infused as a sanctifying grace. Then we rise to the highest and last of the moral affections, out of which we have the spiritual love. The religious life of the soul comes of the moral affections, and its blossoming is in love. Its highest fruit is in the fruits of love. Its highest evidence is in the evidence of love. Religion changes the moral affections, not the intellect, not the perceptive and logical faculties, not the will, but the moral affections. It is the heart, the moral affections, that is made a new creature in Christ Jesus, and hence it is that religion is love. That is all there is of it, because love fulfills all of its law, and love expresses and incarnates all of its life, and every grace and every element of character in the child of God. The heart into which the Christ has been formed has the fountain of life and the fountain of love; so that we love because he first loved us, and love is the expression of his life; hence the apostle says, "He that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God, for God is love." Christian life is not only the incarnation of the divine life, but is the perpetuation of the union of the divine and the human. It is the reproduction of the incarnate life of the Son of man, of the Son of God; so that the development of life out of the moral affections is the development of love and a development of the moral life, and a moral life that is sanctified by the love of God. A happy marriage is the

and so the union of the intellect and affections is the most perfect and beautiful state of moral life where the affections desire only what the intellect approves, and the intellect approves only what the affections desire, and this is done only through the living principle of love. It is the unity of character, conjugal amity in character, or you may call it the sentiment of the seventh chapter of Romans, or you may call it love's conquered peace, for the old feuds between the lusts of the flesh and lusts of the spirit are settled. When the flesh dominates, the result is sin. When the spirit dominates, the result is life. When the Christian life, his religious life, culminates in the intellect, the tendency is to rationalism. When the Christian life culminates and terminates in the affections, the tendency is to fanaticism. But love holds the intellect and the affections like the two sides of an equation, in perfect equipoise, producing well-rounded Christian lives, the development of all the elements under the powers of a new affection. Some one has called it the expulsive power of a new affection, by which every other element is expelled from the life. Now, if love be the law and principle of unity in personal character, it is also the law and principle of unity among men, and why not? Of late a great deal has been said about Christian unity, the union of all believers, for which Jesus prayed and John wrote and Paul prayed. So much has been said about it in late years—much that is wise and much that is otherwise. Does it mean corporate union or heart union? Does it mean the union of all the churches under the name of one creed and one polity, or does it mean the unity of the spirit in the bonds of peace? Does it mean the union of ecclesiastical bodies, or does it mean

THE BAPTISM OF EVERY SPIRIT

into the spirit of Christ—heart union? I think sometimes people do not know what they are talking about. God has divided humanity into families, tribes and nationalities and races, because of our diversity, because of our differences. You put all the families in the earth together into one family, and tell them, "You must be brothers, and live in peace and harmony." Do you think it would be peace and harmony? It would be bedlam.

Or put all the races together, and say to them, "You are made of one blood, and you have got to be homogeneous," when the fact is, it would be an irresponsible conflict. The grandest problem that was ever presented to any people on this earth is the problem before the Southern people of this day, to harmonize two races under the same laws and under the same institutions, and it is not a question of color. It is a question of race instincts, and all the legislation under heaven and all the constitutional amendments that could be made until the day of doom can not change the race instincts of man; but if you let God work out the problem under the principle of love, you will find the solution of it. God will solve the problem himself, but it will be solved not by racial equality. It will be solved in God's own time.

You put all the churches of this country into one church, and say, "You be brothers; you are reconciled to God by the same cross and the same blood," and do you think it would be brotherly love? I think not. It would be turning the Philistines and Ishmaelites both loose upon the fair heritage of God to waste and destroy. And why? Because of our differences. I think the apostle had exactly the right view of it, and just the very view upon which only we can recognize and reconcile the differences among men, "There are diversities of gifts, but the same Spirit, and there are differences of administrations, but the same Lord, and there are diversities of operations, but it is the same God which worketh all in all," recognizing a universal law, a law of nature and grace, a law of matter and mind, a law that obtains everywhere in life, that you would express, perhaps, in such terms as this, "Harmony in variety, unity in diversity." Matter is in endless forms, and figures of endless variety, but matter itself is unity. Light is a unit, but light expresses itself in an endless variety of colors. Men have different opinions, but unity of mind. Forms are infinite in their variety, but God is a unit, and so it is in everything—infinite variety, and yet that infinite variety in absolute unity. God never duplicates himself. God never repeats his work. You can find no two things on the face of the earth exactly like, not even the leaves in the forest or the grains of sand upon the seashore. The grandest expression of an infinite life is in the infinite varieties of life and in the infinite forms of matter, and yet the unity of it all in the matter itself and in the very life itself.

THE HAPPY TIME COMING,

foretold by prophets and apostles, will be the reign of the universal law of love. Just as love dominates the hearts of men, just as love becomes the ruling passion among men, will there be universal brotherhood in the right relations of men, and that is the coming of the kingdom of God. I am glad that the churches are getting nearer together. I am glad that people are coming to love one another. We will never get, my friends, into the same church. We will never get into the same forms and modes of spiritual life. There will be endless diversity, diversity of gifts, but the same Spirit.

The fact is, that as long as we are made so different we require different manifestations of life and different manifestations of order, in order to develop life and different law and different types of being, and this will continue. The fact is that charity, that divinest expression of love, was never made for unity, but made for division. There is no charity in a perfect union. There is no charity in a perfect union of a man and wife; that is not charity. But when love harmonizes our differences without destroying them, then it is charity—that charity which is the bond of perfectness. You may consider me rash, but I believe I will presume to say at least that I deeply regret that the revisers of the Bible have seen proper to take away that distinction; have left out of the thirteenth of First Corinthians the word "charity," substituting "love," therefore destroying the highest distinction of love. What is charity? Not almsgiving, but it is that higher principle of life that harmonizes our varying opinions, so that you can be a Presbyterian, and you can be a Baptist, and I can be a Methodist, and yet love can harmonize our differences, and let them remain so that we can love one another as brothers, and that is unity in the bond of peace, and that is the only union. We had the spectacle before our church—the Northern and Southern Church, and the Northern and Southern Presbyterian. We have had before us for years in the history of the church a formal fraternity, and I say in my place that a formal fraternity without love is a formal fraud. Love is the only bond of union among men, and just as we love one another will we have the perfect union.

But, then, I said that the gospel is the history of love, and the cross is the sacrifice of love. I mean that the gift of God's love in God's own Son, the gift of eternal love to man through the offering of God's own Son for the sins of many, was the last and the costliest expression of God's love. Love means sacrifice, and, my friend, you hear me, there is and the sacrifice of himself was the last and costliest expression of his love. The cross is not only the last and costliest expression of God's love, but it comes into every form of Christian service, and hence, when human life becomes the sacrifice of love, then human love becomes the expression of that love measured by the divine love. When he said, "As I have loved you, even so love one another," he means to make his life the measure of our love. If he can lay down his life for us, we can lay down "our lives for one another." Jesus became the cross by the offering of himself to God upon the altar of his life to man. You and I became Christians by the offering of ourselves to God upon the altar of our service for man, and whenever the cross crucifies the self, it puts self upon the altar of God for the service of man, and makes our love for men the sovereign law of life. Then you solve every problem of the kingdom of God, and its solution is in the power of redeeming and saving love.

When selfishness is the law of human life in business, in society, in commerce, in manufacture, in politics, in the schools—in anything—it is infidelity; it is anarchy. The cross means death to sin and death to self. Then, instead of living a selfish love, we can live a sacrificial life: and just as Christ bore the sins of many, so we can bear the sins of many. Hence you see that love is not merely a feeling—not merely a passion. It is a life. Love without law is not much. It don't mean anything, but love is life. Love is the divinest life in the world. Love is the truest life in the world, and it furnishes us the truest law in the world. It holds the heart and the life true to itself and true to God, true to the truth, true to your fathers, true to your obligations, true to duty, true to every claim of human life. Oh! it is the truest, as it is the divinest, principle in this world.

Faithlessness to this universal law of love blasted down and drove the first pair from Paradise, and wrecked and ruined the world. Faithlessness to this universal law of life is doing it to-day. You never take up the morning paper that you don't read the story, the sad, the bitter story, of unrequited love—love's labor lost, plighted vows broken, hearts crushed. That is the source of all the crime, and the only remedy is the love that brought the Son of God upon the cross, and that will bring you and me upon the cross of sacrifice of life for the love of men.

The gospel teaches us that eternal life is the eternal sacrifice of love. We have never yet discovered the heart of love in the sacrifice of love, and that is the very law that we ought to determine and that we ought to understand, for the inspiration of the highest duty is in love. "If you love me, keep my commandments." "He that hath my commandments and keepeth them, he is that loveth me," and you can as much as you please, my friend, but you show your love for him only when you keep his commandments. "If ye keep my commandments, ye shall abide in my love, even as I have kept my Father's commandments and abide in his love." That makes love the law of life. I said that religion was love. I wish we could embody that idea in every form of religious profession.

These preachers talk to you a great deal about the life of faith, and there is such a life, but do you know anything of the life of love? Faith and knowledge and temperance and patience and calmness are selfish virtues. They are the religion of man; but brotherly kindness and charity are the religion of angels and of God. Faith is Noah building the ark 120 years, and then launching it upon the flood, and standing at last upon Ararat, hard by his altar of sacrifice, while the smoke of its incense ascended up to heaven with the bow of hope spanning the skies; but love is God kindling the great sun in the heavens that dried the flood and painted the bow and gave the assurance that the world would not be destroyed. Faith is Enoch walking with God 300 years. You talk about working out your salvation, my friend. You think of that—300 years walking with God, looking at his salvation! See what there was in that, what possibilities! But love is God coming after Enoch and translating him, that he should not see death. Faith is Moses refusing to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter, turning his back upon the crown and the kingdom, and choosing rather the afflictions of the people of God, banishing himself into a strange land; but love is God coming down and in that wonderful bush of fire, talking with Moses, and giving him a commission to deliver his people from bondage, and establishing a great theocracy for the kingdom of God. Faith is Moses standing in the court of Pharaoh, demanding that he let the children of Israel go, but love is God kindling the holy fire in the hearts of the elders of Israel, and then transferring that fire to the pillar of cloud to go before them by day, and a pillar of fire to go before them by night. Faith is Moses speaking to the children of Israel, "Let them go forward," and then lifting his rod over the Red Sea and bidding the children of Israel go on dry ground in the midst of the sea; but love is God plowing through that sea and lifting its waters in liquid walls upon either side, so that his children might pass over, and then flooding his enemies so that the horse and his rider were drowned in the depths of the sea. Faith is Moses climbing the mount that smoked and trembled with the breath of God; but love is God talking face to face with Moses, giving him the laws for his people. Faith grows heroic in Paul and in Peter, but love grows resplendent in John and in Mary of Bethany.

Friend, I want you to live the life of faith, but would to God you would ascend to that higher life. Just blossom into the life of love, your whole being transfigured by the divine love, and you become like him, as he is the incarnate love.

Heaven, I said, was the reward, and it is also the fruition of love. Has love no future? Does the grave end all of love? Is there no development of love in the hereafter? O, sir, I just want to tell you that heaven is the only place where love can be essentially mutual, and where all of its high conditions can be fulfilled, and where perfect love casteth out all fear.

Selections

Who shall say that the spirit of the noble army of martyrs has not been reproduced in our own time? Among the missionaries who lost their lives at Kucheng, China, were two young ladies who had left the comforts of a Christian home to carry the gospel to the heathen, and when the sad news of the massacre reached their mother, instead of complaining she exclaimed, "Would to God that I could go to China to take up the work of my martyred daughters." What a striking exhibition of lofty Christian faith and devotion! How poor besides this cheerful surrender of beloved children seem the largest pecuniary gifts! Ah, if the spirit of this bereaved mother pervaded the church of Christ, there would be no lack of men, women or means for the work of evangelization at home or abroad. —Exchange.

Mr. Moody says he "never knew the Lord to use a discouraged man to do any work for him." We once met a Christian man whose theme of conversation with everyone he met and all the time he talked was the growing evils of the times. He waxed hot in opposing the idea that the moral interests of men were improving. He delighted in hearing and reading thunderbolt denunciations of the church and ministry. So far as he is able, he is taking the heart, hope, courage and faith out of every Christian worker he meets. He does not intend to do harm, but, in fact, he is doing about all he can to ruin the soldiers whom Jesus Christ relies upon to capture this world for him.—South Carolina Christian Advocate.

We have all heard of the old woman who said, the first time she had seen the sea, "What a comfort it is to see something of which there is enough for everyone!" What a comfort it is to think that in the ocean of God's forgiving love there is enough salvation for everyone—that not this or that favorite, but whosoever will-eth, may come and take the water of life freely. There is no difficulty on God's side, but on ours a whole ocean of unbelief and unwillingness.—Selected.

THE BIBLE

Oh, never on this holy Book
With careless, cold indifference look;
If thou art sad, come here and find
A balm to soothe and cheer the mind;
If thou art merry, here are songs
Fit to be sung by angels' tongues;
If thou art rich in things of earth,
Learn here thy wealth is nothing worth;
If thou art poor, this precious mine
Hath countless treasures - all are thine

Would it not be an insult to the religious intelligence of the church to pause here long enough to prove that the Bible teaches the doctrine of missions, and that the Word of God makes it binding upon every saved person to send, or to carry, the gospel to those who sit in the shadow and night of heathenism? For no intelligent reader of God's Word can fail to see that the spirit of missions is the very soul of Christianity, and that to be a Bible Christian he must supply the destitute with the gospel; therefore, we would simply "stir up your pure minds by way of remembrance."

Just before our Savior ascended into heaven he said to the church, "After that the Holy Ghost is come upon you, ye shall receive power; and ye shall be witnesses unto me, both in Jerusalem and Judea and Samaria, and unto the uttermost parts of the earth." Paul states the case well in his letter to the Romans: "For whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved. How, then, shall they call upon him in whom they have not believed? And how shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard? And how shall they hear without a preacher? And how shall they preach except they be sent?"

Many questions of interest are pressing upon the church for settlement, but the most important question that confronts the church, and that should subordinate every other question, is missions. More than eighteen hundred years ago our Lord said, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature," yet the gospel has not been preached to every creature. Ten hundred millions of earth's sorrowing, sinning children have not heard Messiah's name. This vast multitude are yet groping their way in spiritual darkness. Five thousand and four hundred generations of the church have come and gone, and yet the millions have not heard of the Christ. Will the church of to-day repeat the crime of the church past? Will she, through unbelief, fail to move forward to the conquest of the world for Christ? Now is the most propitious time the church has ever had for the speedy conversion of the world. Improved machinery, together with the application of steam and electricity, have obliterated time and distance, thereby making the nations of the earth door-neighbors. While these natural forces were being utilized, and the great highways were being thrown up, over which the controlled forces of nature are to bear the missionary with his message of love, God has, in a most marvelous way, prepared the world for the reception of the gospel. China, with her 400,000,000, has opened wide her doors for the triumphal entrance of the gospel. Africa and India stand with open arms to receive Christ. Is not this the miracle of the nineteenth century? The gateway of the nations stands wide open for the entrance of the Lord's anointed, who, standing at the head of our lagging, halting columns, says, "Move forward." The command is, "Go." When? Next year? No; next year will be too late for the 30,000,000 who die annually. Next decade? No; during the next ten years 300,000,000 heathens will have gone into eternity. Next century? No; by that time all the living will be in the regions of the dead. When? Now! "Now is the day of salvation!" The command is in the present tense and to the present church. The command is not to the church of yesterday. Their door of opportunity is forever closed. It is not to the church of to-morrow. Their chance for winning immortal souls into Christ's kingdom has not come. The command is to the church of to-day. The Captain of our salvation says, "Go ye"—now, to day—"and preach the gospel to every creature."

Do you ask, Where are the men and women who are willing to carry the gospel into the regions beyond? We answer, Lift up your eyes and behold the vast army of consecrated men and women who are not only willing, but yearning to carry the Lamp of Life to the millions who are sitting in the night and death of heathenism. Thousands of our most gifted young men and talented young women are ready and waiting to be sent with the message of love and salvation. If the church were ready to obey her Lord's last command, she could raise an army 100,000 strong, and in fifty years unfurl the banners of Christ over all the nations of earth. But you ask, Where is the money with which to send such an army of missionaries? We answer, In the hands of the professed followers of Christ. By a most wonderful providence the wealth of the world has fallen into the hands of Christian men and women. An eminent statistician says that about four-fifths of the wealth of the world is owned by Christians, and that the great bulk of that is owned by Protestants. He further states that in 1870 there was but one Christian millionaire in the world, and that in 1890 there were one hundred. In addition to these there are thousands whose wealth approximates a million, and a vast number who are far above want; therefore, why not move forward with our missionary enterprise to the immediate subjugation of the kingdoms of darkness to the kingdom of Christ? Time and distance have been annihilated, every door of heathenism has been thrown wide open to the all-conquering Christ, thousands of men and women are eagerly waiting to carry the message of God's love, and by a wonderful revolution in the finances of the world millions of wealth have flowed into the hands of God's children. Why not send 100,000 missionaries in the next five years? We answer, Disloyalty to Christ is the only obstacle. If the church were as loyal to Christ as she should be, the twentieth century would dawn upon a world emblazoned with the light of the gospel, and crowned with a halo of glory. Is the church not loyal to Christ? Let us see. We have in the Mississippi Conference thirty-seven thousand members. With this large membership we paid last year for missions about $6,000, which was sixteen cents per member. We ask, Is that loyalty? No, no, no! The Moravian Church is said to pay $18 per member for the spread of the gospel. Every forty members pay $720 annually for missions. That is loyalty; that is consecrated enthusiasm for Christ and the salvation of souls. What would such loyalty mean in the Mississippi Conference? What would it mean in Southern Methodism? It would mean for the Mississippi Conference $666,000 annually for missions, and for the whole connection $27,000,000. If Southern Methodism were as loyal to Christ as the Moravians, our great church alone could send 27,000 men into the foreign fields.

In conclusion, you ask, "Will the heathen be lost if we fail to send or go?" That is not the question that confronts the church. The question is, Will the church be saved herself if she fails to send the gospel? That is the burning question that is waiting an answer at the door of every saved man's heart. Christ says, "If ye love me, keep my commandments;" "If ye love me, ye will keep my words." What is his great and last command? "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." Now, if we fail to obey him, we do not love him. If we fail to send the gospel, we fail to obey him; and if we fail to obey him, we can not be saved. But you say, "We show him our love by keeping up our home institutions." What you pay for the gospel at home is paid for a home necessity. You can no more dispense with your preacher and church than you can dispense with your school teacher and school. The gospel is as much a necessity as your meat and bread. But what you pay to missions is purely an expression of love and loyalty to Christ. Oh, then, how little do most of us love our Lord, who died to save us! Let us hear our Savior's command, and move on with the victories of the cross, till all nations join in singing,

"All hail the power of Jesus' name!
Let angels prostrate fall:
Bring forth the royal diadem,
And crown him Lord of all."

When that bright day dawns men and angels will join in singing, "Praise God, from whom all blessings flow!"

"More Than Conquerors."

"In all these things we are more than conquerors, through him that loved us."—Rom. viii, 37.

It is said that Constantine the Great saw in vision a cross displayed in the heavens on which glowed those words: "By this sign you shall conquer." The legend has a larger meaning: it is a prophecy for us all: our victory in this war with sin must come "through Him that loved us."

You observe the past tense is used. Paul does not mean that Christ once loved us, but does not now; it is only a rhetorical way of saying that his love was once wonderfully expressed for us on Calvary.

Christ died that we might be saved — saved from hell — saved from sin — saved from every effort and purpose of the devil to ruin us. It is, therefore, by the cross —i. e., the death of Christ—that we conquer. "In all these things"—in tribulation or distress, or persecution, or famine, or nakedness, or peril, or sword—"we are more than conquerors through him that loved us." It is a fact of infinite practical value to us, that no Christian ever fell into sin while faithfully trusting the crucified Christ.

"We are more than conquerors." To be a conqueror is the highest human ideal of success in a conflict. Paul says the Christian who trusts the Christ is more than a conqueror; what does he mean? He evidently had in mind one of those magnificent triumphant entries into Rome by one of her victorious Emperors returning from some distant scene of war. These Roman Christians, to whom this epistle was written, had witnessed the splendid pageant. They had seen the Cæsar borne in a golden chariot, at whose wheels walked conquered kings, through the flower-carpeted streets spanned by gorgeous triumphal arches, while martial music and the shouts of welcome and applause mingled voluptuously above the shining turrents of "the Eternal City." Rome in all her long history had never witnessed pageants so grand as these of her later world-conquering Cæsars; and the whole world, with all her "gorgeous east" and her golden Egypt, had never seen anything to rival them. These Roman Christians knew well what it meant to be a conqueror. Paul evidently thought of all this; and then he thought of the conquest of sin and sin's emissaries; a victory which every Christian achieves through Christ. He knew that the conquests wrought by the Cæsars were never complete, were never permanent, were really matters of small import. If Cæsar returning from Gaul or Britain or Africa was a Roman ideal of a conqueror, then the Christian conquering sin and its myriad minions was more than a conqueror.

It means that the Christian conquers sin in every form, of every degree, and of every shade. It means that the Christian's final conquest of sin through Christ is permanent. Cæsar by conquest made Egypt, Gaul and Britain Roman provinces. Today Egypt is a province of Turkey, Gaul is an independent republic, and Britain is a grander empire than Rome ever was, while the kingdom of the Cæsars has been for more than a thousand years unknown to the geography of the world: but he who conquers sin through the Christ achieves a victory that will last forever. The crown that Cæsar wore and the throne to which he climbed by conquest, like the empire he founded, have passed away; but the crown that our Lord shall place on the brow of the Christian conqueror is as fadeless as the coronal of God, and the throne to which our Christ will lead us shall stand while the throne of the universe stands.

"We are more than conquerors." The words in their literal sense are self contradictory; but the thought is as true as God. When we stand in transfigured glory on the eternal hills of God, we shall better understand their wonderful meaning.

The Woman's Parsonage and Home Mission Society of the M. E. Church, South, held its annual session in Little Rock, Ark., Nov. 5-9. This hospitable State accorded a welcome rarely tendered any body of Christian workers. Judge Basham represented the State, Col. Winfield the "City of Roses," and Col. Thornburgh the city churches, in extending most cordial greetings.

First Methodist Church having been burned a few months prior to the convention, Mrs. J. D. Reeves, in behalf of Second Baptist Church, tendered that beautiful temple, with the request that we accept it in Christian hospitality, and use it as if it were our own. Miss Matilda Ratcliffe presented the body with beautiful guidons for each Conference Society, from the young ladies of First Methodist Church, and Mrs. Patillo, a handsome gavel, made of five kinds of Arkansas wood, and mounted with silver, a gift from Mrs. William Thompsom. Mrs. T. B. Martin, in behalf of the local auxiliary of the W. P. and H. M. S., greeted us in words of welcome, which thrilled our hearts with delight that the cause we represented should inspire such cordial hospitality. Mrs. Hotchkiss, in her fraternal greetings from the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, made us realize that we were going hand in hand advancing the Master's cause.

Bishop Galloway preached a most inspiring sermon from Gal. vi, 17: "From henceforth let no man trouble me; for I bear in my body the marks of the Lord Jesus," which greatly strengthened us for future work.

Bishop Hargrove and Dr. Tigert also preached helpful and encouraging sermons, and were present at our business sessions, aiding us by their wise counsel.

Dr. Patillo, pastor of First Church, was present all the time, and gave most courteous attention to all the demands upon him.

Drs. Dye and Godbey, and many other preachers from the district, honored us with their presence.

The reports from the various departments of work undertaken struck with electric force the magnetic fibers of our hearts, and produced renewed enthusiasm. The general secretary reported 97 parsonages aided throughout Southern Methodism this past year by the Central Committee and Conference societies. Only the itinerant circuit rider can appreciate the joy and comfort which come to 97 preachers and their families.

The Departments of Mite Boxes and Systematic Giving are closely allied, the former serving as object-lessons to develop the latter.

The work for the mountain whites will soon crystallize into the Sue Bennett Memorial School, where these illiterate and lawless mountaineers will be taught that industry and self-help make character, and that Christian character is the one grand principle of human life.

The orphanage for which Mrs. Wiley has labored so assiduously, located at Greenville, Tenn., touches the tenderest chord in every mother's heart.

The city mission work, in its varied departments, appeals to Christian womanhood as nothing else can.

The Cuban Mission work in Florida is growing and widening in the benevolent hands of Mrs. Wolff.

Many new methods were discussed, and some adopted, for advancing the work, until every loyal pastor and member of the M. E. Church, South, should do their whole duty for this institution of our loved Methodism.

But one thing marred the happiness of the occasion—the telegram announcing the death of Dr. Lyons. A shadow fell across our hearts, and loving sympathy was expressed for the dear wife hastily summoned home to meet such a sorrow.

To All Members of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, Adult and Juvenile, Louisiana Conference:

At the last annual meeting of the Woman's Board of Missions the following resolution was "enthusiastically adopted:"

Resolved, That, as a Board, we pledge ourselves to make every effort to reach 100,000 members and to raise $100,000 the coming year.

It was found that for the absolute necessities of the work, and in order that no field already occupied should suffer, an increase of membership to the number of 28,530, and increase of receipts to the amount of $25,596.84 over last year, would be necessary. This has been wisely divided by the proper committee into a pro rata statement for each Conference Society, showing just how much will be required in that society to accomplish the end in view.

In this manner it is estimated that for the Louisiana Conference W. F. M. S., new members to be added before March, 1897, must be 250: Money to be raised before March, 1897, $1,025.

In 1895-96 the Kentucky Conference Society took the lead in proportionate giving, contributing $2.07 per member, while Louisiana held second place, averaging $1.73 per member. Let us thank God and take courge that we have been able amid many hindrances, local and otherwise, to thus witness for the cause to which our best service is pledged; and seeing we have reason for gratitude, let us press forward to perform the part allotted in the pro rata distribution already noted. All money sent to the treasurer will be included in this apportionment. We would urge all auxiliaries to let the Week of Thanksgiving and Prayer be one of special offering in this direction.

Miss M. L. Gibson, vice-president Woman's Board of Foreign Missions, thus speaks: "The Ides of March were of momentary import to Cæsar in days of old when loyal citizens thought that Rome was endangered, and yet it seems to me that each member of the Board is brought this year into a more vital relation with the 'First of March,' as we shall have to prove our loyalty and fidelity to God, and the trust committed to us by the effort we shall have made to redeem our pledge to extend and enrich his visible and spiritual kingdom. We need the power of the Holy Spirit anointing us anew for service."

We beg the women of the church to heed this special call; to consider each, herself, as the one appointed to do this thing for God.

Selections.

The Contagion of Goodness.

One of the most admirable traits of youth is its strong faith in the communicable nature of all good things. Youth is unselfish, and it is optimistic; therefore, having any good thing itself, it not only desires to share it, but is confident of its ability to impart the blessing.

See how it is in the matter of health. Your rosy-cheeked, strong-limbed boy or girl, rejoicing in the full tide of life and health, will not believe—can hardly understand—the tyranny of weakness and disease, but says: "Come, play with me, run with me, ride with me, and I will make you strong and well." So, also, the happy young person is a constant source of sunshine to all around, believing not only in the naturalness of joy, but in the power of joy to communicate itself to others.

This disposition is of rare value and helpfulness when youth gives itself to the service of Christ and endeavors to do some real and worthy work for the Master. It establishes a sort of contagion of goodness among all who come under the influence of young and devoted Christians. The moral donative or giving power of Christian youth, backed as it is by the most absolute faith in the communicability of its own convictions and emotions, is one of the strongest agencies for conversion which the church has at its command. Everybody in those days knows what organized young people are doing for the cause of Christ throughout the world. These organizations are like leaven which is leavening the whole mass. The confidence, the devotion, the enthusiasm of the Christian youth of the church are simply irresistible. The world can not withstand the contagion of their faith. Goodness, virtue, the Christian life, are transmitted from individual to individual by the generous and enthusiastic spirit of youth as never before in the history of the world. "The world for Christ" is not a presumptuous motto for Epworth Leaguers and Christian Endeavorers. The marvelous record of these organizations justifies their sublime faith in the salvability of the race. Righteousness can be made lovely, winning, attractive; it can so take possession of men's hearts that they must and will draw others to themselves and infect them with the same joy and hope and enthusiasm. This is the firm conviction of youth; this is the faith upon which its triumphs are based. And may the glorious work go on until the banner of Christ waves, not only over every land, but over every soul and daughter of our Heavenly Father!—Zion's Herald.

Encourage the Minister.

If your minister helps you by a sermon, tell him so. You have no idea how much good it will do him. If you have received a blessing do not grudge to give a blessing. Dean Boyle in his "Recollections" tells the following story:

When I first went to Bridgenorth, I found myself in the house of a very thoughtful man, who told me that he owed his soul to two sermons preached in my church by my predecessor.

"I was a regular infidel," he said, "and I went after many years to the church. There I heard a sermon that gave me a week's misery. The next Sunday I went again and heard another. These two sermons set me thinking. I began to read the Bible, and at last I found peace."

"You went and told the clergyman, I hope, and encouraged him in his work?"

"I!" he said. "Oh, no; I never spoke to him in my life."—Presbyterian Review.

In accomplishing your day's work you have simply to take one step at a time. To take that step wisely is all that you need to think about. If I am climbing a mountain, to look down may make me dizzy; to look too far up may make me tired and discouraged. Take no anxious thought for the morrow. Sufficient for the day—yes, and for each hour in the day—is the toil or the trial thereof. There is not a child of God in this world who is strong enough to stand the strain of to-day's duties and all the load of to-morrow's anxieties piled upon the top of them. Paul himself would have broken down if he had attempted the experiment. We have a perfect right to ask our heavenly Father for strength equal to the day; but we have no right to ask him for one extra ounce of strength for anything beyond it. When the morrow comes grace will come with it sufficient for its tasks or for its troubles.

"Let me be strong in word and deed
Just for to-day!
Lord! for to-morrow and its needs,
I must not pray."
—Theodore L. Cuyler, D. D.

No Christian is born a spiritual cripple. But many a Christian becomes such a cripple by his own acts, and it takes but a seemingly small evil act or sinful indulgence to cripple the soul. Mrs. Hannah Whitall Smith says: "Any root of bitterness cherished towards another, any self-seeking, any harsh judgments indulged in, any slackness in obeying the voice of the Lord, any doubtful habits or surroundings—any one of these things will effectually cripple and paralyze our spiritual life." How much our spiritual soundness and vigor and usefulness depend upon own carefulness! Take heed how you live!

I used to think it was great to disregard happiness; to press to a high goal, careless, disdainful of it. But now I see that there is nothing so great as to be capable of happiness—to pluck it out of "each moment, and, whatever happens," to find that one can ride as gay and buoyant on the angry, menacing, tumultuous waves of life as on those that glide and glitter under a clear sky; that it is not defeat and wretchedness which come out of the storms of adversity, but strength and calmness.—Anne Gilchrist.

The Christian home is the mightiest instrument in the work of regenerating and elevating the human race. It is the guiding star of our good destiny. Home should be made everything.—Madison C. Peters.

How shall we dare to behold that holy face that brought salvation to us, and we turned away and fell in love with death, and kissed deformity and sin.—Jeremy Taylor.

If you would not be forgotten as soon as you are dead, either write things worth reading or do things worth writing.—Benjamin Franklin.

There is only one right way to be a Christian, and that is to be one all the time.

A Christmas Trip.

Tho thousands of Texans who came from the South Atlantic States find much pleasure in reverting to the happy days of long ago when they were children, and often they awake at night to recall those scenes of yore which gave to life a charm, and which now come in later years as visions of joy. There is a tender spot in every heart for the old home, and the memories which cluster about the dear old spot are solaces in the weary, weary struggle we make day by day to build in our new Eldorado a home to which our children in future time will turn, as we turn now to the old place where our loved ones in the evening of life await the final summons.

The Texas and Pacific Railway Company again offers you the opportunity to go "back to the old home." Round-trip excursion tickets will be on sale from all points on the system on Dec. 21 and 22, 1896, to points in the Southeastern States, at one fare for the round trip, tickets good 30 days from date of sale. See your nearest ticket agent for further information, and do not fail to send eight cents postage to the undersigned for a copy of the finest publication on Texas ever issued, to show to your friends at home.

A Discovery by a Preacher.

A discovery has been made by Rev. J. W. Blosser, M. D., of Atlanta, Ga., which marks a new era in the treatment of Catarrh, Bronchitis, Catarrhal Deafness, Asthma, etc., of which he has made a special study for the last twenty years. The remedy is applied in a practical way, which brings it in direct contact with every affected spot. It destroys the disease germs or microbes, and makes a radical cure. Its use is convenient and pleasant. He desires to place it in the hands of every sufferer, and will mail a trial sample free to everyone who will address Dr. J. W. Blosser & Son, 12 and 13 Grant Building, Atlanta, Ga.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. H. D. Howell, Pearlington, Miss., Nov. 23: "I have just completed my four year's pastorate at Hattiesburg, during which time I received one hundred and eighty into the church, making an average of forty-five each year. Before I left the stewards made a full settlement with me and the presiding elder. I have in hand all the collections ordered by the Annual Conference. Besides, I was presented with an elegant suit of clothes; and the good women of our church made my wife a valuable and beautiful present. Hattiesburg will be a good place for some preacher next year. The Mississippi Conference will be invited to hold its next session there."

Rev. T. B. Cottrell, Lake City, Miss., Nov. 22: "With this Sunday we close our labors for the Conference year, 1896, on the Silver Creek and Bee Lake charge. Here is where the writer gets his first experience in the itinerant life. This has been indeed a pleasant and, we trust, a profitable year's work. If good congregations, and an increased interest in church affairs generally, are signs of spiritual improvement, we have good reason to be encouraged. All of our assessments have been met in full, with a goodly sum for other objects, amounting in all to $1,117.15. In addition to this full financial report, the extra kindness of the ladies on this charge deserve special mention. Their thoughtful attention and consideration, as evidenced by many useful gifts, will ever be held in grateful remembrance. All of our appointments have been filled except three, which were providentially prevented. Miles traveled on the work, 2,150; pastoral visits, 230; members received, 26; lost one by death, one by certificate; held two protracted meetings—one at Sharbrough's Chapel. Rev. T. J. Norsworthy did the preaching in this meeting, to the satisfaction and spiritual benefit of all. At our October appointment here Bro. T. B. Holloman was present, and further promoted the good cause by his able pulpit ministrations. The other was held at Silver City, where Bro. J. D. Ellis, by special invitation, was present, and did much good by his strong gospel sermons. Bro. T. J. Norsworthy also assisted in this meeting. Children's Day was observed at both these places, and resulted successfully. Our nice little church at Campbellsville was dedicated on the fourteenth instant by our beloved presiding elder, Rev. R. D. Norsworthy, on which occasion he gave us an eloquent sermon, based on Peter's proposition to our Lord at the transfiguration to build three tabernacles, etc. From here we went to Hillsdale, where, after another powerful sermon by the presiding elder from the text, 'Know them that labor among you,' in which the people were reminded of their duty to pastor and church, with a gentle reminder to the preacher of his duty also, our last Quarterly Conference was held, with good attendance. All these people, at Bee Lake, Silver City, Sharbrough's Chapel and Hillsdale, have shown, by their kindness and attention, that they know how to treat a pastor and his family."

Rev. W. H. Hill, Waterproof, La., Nov. 23: "I send you the following from Waterproof circuit: Yesterday was our fourth quarterly meeting occasion. Bro. B. F. White, our presiding elder, preached from Acts ii, 1: 'When the day of Pentecost was fully come they were all with one accord in one place.' I have not heard a better exposition of the doctrine of sanctification as held by our church. It seems to me it ought to satisfy any lover of our Zion. We have had some gains on the circuit this year, but not many, on account of the small white population we have here. Our finance will be better this year than last. We live among a liberal people. There has been considerable improvement on church property. Our parsonage is now in good condition. Our church at Wesley Chapel needs some repairs, but I hope another year it will be attended to. In conclusion, Mr. Editor, I will say the people of the circuit have been kind to the preacher and his family, for which I pray God's blessings upon them."

WAYNESBORO STATION, MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

From Oct. 24 to Nov. 3 was given to the above by invitation of the efficient and beloved pastor, Bro. H. E. Partridge. The attendance was good day and night, and the work seemed to be deep and thorough. Here, as at so many other points, large numbers crowded the altar seeking either pardon, reclamation or sanctification. The Holy Spirit witnessed to the blood, and many rejoiced in the clear witness of the salvation sought. It was a time of grace and comfort to many believers who found the priceless pearl of entire sanctification. The meeting reached the best class of citizens, young, middle-aged and old. It was a time of great joy in the Lord.

DESOTO, MISS.

God in his providence had removed the faithful pastor, Bro. N. M. Clark. Protracted illness had prevented special services. The Official Board, with the advice and consent of the presiding elder, Bro. L. Carley, arranged for a meeting to begin Sunday, Nov. 1. The interest at Waynesboro prevented an earlier opening than Wednesday, Nov. 4, at 11 A. M. The attendance was large and the interest unusual. At the first call the altar was well filled, and seven were saved and sanctified. The meeting reached all classes, and at the close of six days one who took account of the professions estimated the number saved and sanctified between one hundred and fifteen to twenty. The work was clear and witnessed to by the Holy Spirit. In proof of this, the saved witnessed in joyous testimony to the fact and became active workers in the meeting. To God, who always "causeth us to triumph in Christ Jesus," be all the glory. Eighteen applied for membership in the Methodist Church. As elsewhere the subjects of the saving power of the gospel were members of some church.

Opposition to the Methodistic teaching on the doctrine of entire sanctification gave way, as the Holy Spirit so clearly set his seal on the teaching.

Every good man will admit that it is the experience the church needs, and the teaching that leads believers into it can but do good. Praise the Lord!

From DeSoto to Emory, Ala., required only a pleasant drive of one day; so closing at the former the evening of the ninth, the next day we were present and began a meeting which lasted to the sixteenth. The house was too small to accommodate the people, and we were at a great disadvantage both for lack of an altar and room to accommodate the people. But God owned the Word, and about forty souls were saved and sanctified wholly. As at other meetings the testimonies were clear and definite. One man whose wife was seeking to be reclaimed from backsliding refused to allow prayer offered in his house, and was at once convicted of sin and guilt, began immediately to pray, and did not cease until soundly converted. Many addicted to the tobacco habit abandoned it as a needless, expensive and filthy habit. Efficient help was rendered by lay workers, especially Miss Nettie Brown, of York, Ala. God honors these and will give them also with his ministers a rich reward in the "well done, good and faithful servant," that awaits them at the close of the day of life.

The Minister's Wife.

The individual known as "the minister's wife" has her place and sphere. So far as church work is concerned no more responsibility rightfully belongs to her than to the wife of an elder or private member. The notion that she must be "a woman of all work" in the church and community is both cruel and preposterous. The wife of more than one minister would be in good health to-day were it not for yielding to a demand of this character. The late Dr Bethune smote this nonsensical notion in a vital part when the qualifications of his wife for supposed official duty were being looked into, he asked the brethren, "Do you intend to pay her a salary?" A large amount of unnecessary, and often very irksome labor is imposed upon the wife of a minister in the way of calling. There is neither propriety nor necessity in her doing any more in this line of work than any other lady member of the church. Her divinely ordained sphere is in her home. There she belongs, and it is there that she finds obligations and duties which have a paramount claim upon her attention and time.—Mid Continent.

Questionable Methods.

The custom of using coarse and abusive language in the pulpit, introducing slang phrases and current vulgarisms into the sermon—using as illustrations stale jokes and doubtful anecdotes—is upheld by some on the ground that these questionable methods attract a certain class of people, who are benefited by the modicum of gospel that may be worked into the mess that is served up for their delectation. This is a shallow and absurd conceit. Ministers of the gospel should of all men be examples of purity and Christian consecration in speech, as well as in conduct. No corrupt communication should proceed out of their mouths, but "that which is good to the use of edifying." A man's speech is the index to his heart. "The mouth of the righteous speaketh wisdom, and his tongue talketh of judgment." Baltimore Advocate.

Doctor: You have something wrong with your digestive organs. Patient: Well, considering my three daughters are learning to cook, it is hardly to be wondered at.—Exchange.

Nervous
People wonder why their nerves are so weak; why they get tired so easily; why they do not sleep naturally; why they have frequent headaches, indigestion and Nervous Dyspepsia. The explanation is simple. It is found in that impure blood feeding the nerves on refuse instead of the elements of strength and vigor. Hood's Sarsaparilla feeds the nerves pure, rich blood; gives natural sleep, good digestion, is the true remedy for all nervous troubles.

A sick woman cannot expect to have a healthy baby. An unhealthy baby has not the same chance for living as a healthy baby. The mother's condition must of necessity tell on the child's health and happiness. The laws of heredity are inflexible. The mother's weakness will surely show in some way in her child. A mother can make her child's life happy and successful, of miserable and a failure. She can do it by making and keeping herself perfectly strong and healthy during the period of gestation. She can do this by taking Doctor Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It is a most wonderful cure for all forms of female weakness and disease, and perhaps its greatest usefulness is in preparing for the trials and dangers of child-birth. It is a strengthening, purifying tonic. It acts directly on the organs distinctly feminine, drives out all impurities, promotes regularity and restores hearty, vigorous health. It will positively cure any form of female weakness or disease. It is the preparation of a regular, medical practitioner, whose great success as a specialist in the treatment of diseases of women has made him famous all over the world. Dr. Pierce is now, and has been for thirty years, chief consulting physician in the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, at Buffalo, N. Y.

Complete information about the "Favorite Prescription" is to be found in Dr. Pierce's "Common Sense Medical Adviser," several chapters of which are devoted to the reproductive physiology of women. A handsome volume of 1008 pages, and over 300 illustrations. It contains more exact information about the human body in health and disease than any other medical book. Hundreds of useful, simple receipts for the cure of many ailments that come to every family. Its statements are to be absolutely relied upon, and if followed will save many a doctor's bill. A new edition of half a million copies of this book is now being distributed free, bound in strong paper covers. Any one may have a copy who will send 21 cents in one-cent stamps, to pay cost of mailing only, to World's Dispensary Medical Association, Buffalo, N. Y. French cloth binding is 31 cents.

When there is sunshine in the heart it will be seen in the face.

The devil laughs when he sees Christians making war upon each other.

What does the omniscient eye see when it looks into the secret chambers of your soul?

You can't pull a star from its orbit, but you can pluck a flower to throw in your neighbor's pathway.

The man you dislike may, perhaps, need your forgiveness, but not as much as you need the forgiveness of God.

Spiritual greatness consists not in the doing of extraordinary things, but in the doing of ordinary things from an exalted motive.

Far above rubies in value is kindliness of heart. It makes us like unto our Father in heaven; and there is nothing equal to it for winning friends and disarming foes.

Education in the true sense of the word is the symmetrical, harmonious development of the highest and holiest powers of our nature. It makes its possessor happy and makes him serviceable to his fellow-man.

You "want to be an angel," do you? Well, that is an idle wish. You never will be an angel, but you can be "equal unto the angels" when you ascend to your "Father's house of many mansions." And even while you sojourn upon earth you can be a saint; not one of the sham sort created by an ecclesiastical machine, but a real one, whose daily life evinces kinship with Jesus.

A Homiletical Masterpiece.

We do not often publish sermons in the ADVOCATE. We make an exception, however, in the case of the sermon preached on Sunday, Nov. 22, at Carondelet Street Church, by Rev. W. M. Leftwich, D. D. We heard this sermon three years ago when Dr. Leftwich held a meeting for us at Mulberry Street Church, Macon, Ga. We enjoyed it, however, even more the second time than the first. The sermon was published in the Times-Democrat, having been reported by Miss Alma M. Sawtelle, the most thoroughly accurate stenographer we know of. Our readers have it exactly as delivered, with the exception of two anecdotes which are omitted for want of space. We are sure our readers will thank us for the privilege of reading this homiletical gem.

NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

En route to the North Mississippi Conference at Greenville, we had a stop over of a few hours at Vicksburg. We made a very enjoyable visit to our friends, Dr. and Sister Weems. We missed Dr. Andrews, but spent a delightful hour with his charming family.

We reached Greenville in time for the opening of the Conference on Thursday morning. Bishop Galloway was in the chair. J. S. Oakley was elected secretary as a matter of course. After devotional exercises several communications were read and referred to the appropriate committees.

Several visitors were introduced: Dr. J. W. Boswell, of the Nashville Advocate; Dr. W. R. Lambuth, Missionary Secretary, and this scribe.

Eight disciplinary questions were disposed of before the hour for preaching—a record-breaking achievement in a session of two hours.

At a little after 11 o'clock Conference adjourned for a thanksgiving service, which had been appointed for the court-house. The attendance was large, the spacious auditorium being filled to overflowing. The President's proclamation was read by Judge Trigg. The sermon was preached by Bishop Galloway, Dr. W. R. Lambuth and Rev. J. A. Randolph participating in the service. The Bishop was in fine trim, and his sermon fully met public expectation, which is saying a great deal. In the afternoon there was preaching at the Baptist Church by Rev. H. P. Gibbs. At night Rev. J. Ritchey preached at the Methodist Church, the sermon being followed by the sacrament of the Lord's Supper, administered by Rev. W. C. Johnson, of the Memphis Conference. At the same hour this scribe committed a feeble attempt at preaching at the Baptist Church. As a Conference edition of the ADVOCATE will be published soon, we will make no attempt here at a detailed report.

On Friday all minute business, including the twentieth question, was completed, except the questions relating to admission on trial, readmission, and superannuation. Remarkable speed.

Dr. W. B. Palmore, editor of the St. Louis Advocate, was introduced. Rev. T. B. Holloman, agent of Millsaps College, made a brief, but effective address in the interest of the college.

Oxford was selected as the place for the next session.

At night a missionary anniversary was held, at which addresses were delivered by Bishop Galloway and Dr. W. R. Lambuth, both of which were excellent.

On Saturday there were two sessions. At the morning session N. G. Augustus was readmitted, and the following were admitted on trial: J. E. Cunningham, J. A. Braswell, R. A. Tucker, R. E. Duke.

Dr. J. H. Kirkland, Chancellor of Vanderbilt University, was introduced and delivered a masterly address in the interest of higher education.

B. P. Patterson and J. R. Countiss were admitted into full connection.

Bishop Galloway was at his best in his address to this class. We very much regret that we did not have a stenographer present to take it down. It would make excellent reading for laymen as well as preachers.

The committee of trial in the case of D. C. Foust brought in a verdict of acquittal. The committee of trial in the case of J. William Bell rendered a sentence of expulsion.

The financial reports were highly gratifying. Indeed, it is said that '96 eclipses all previous years in this matter. Never in the history of the Conference was so large a percentage of all claims met in full. Bishop Galloway's presidency gave universal satisfaction.

The memorial service was held Saturday afternoon in honor of Revs. T. B. Hargrove, T. B. Malone and J. P. Moore. Suitable memoirs were read, and a number of impromptu talks were made by the friends of the deceased. Saturday night there was an Epworth League rally, at which addresses were delivered by Dr. S. A. Steel, Rev. T. W. Lewis, and Hon. G. S. Lefwich. Sunday's services at the Methodist Church were as follows: Morning sermon by Bishop Galloway, followed by the ordination of deacons; afternoon sermon by Rev. W. C. Johnson, followed by the ordination of elders; night sermon by Dr. S. A. Steel. The sermon by Dr. Steel is said to have been in his best vein. The vast congregation was thrilled with his mighty thought. Other pulpits of the city were filled by members of the Conference.

The following were ordained elders: J. T. Murrah, L. M. Broyles, S. B. Myers, C. A. Pitman, W. W. Mitchell, W. A. Clark, R. A. Meek, E. A. Lewis, A. T. Buck.

On Monday the reports of the various standing committees were adopted. A resolution was adopted condemning inter-collegiate football. The appointments were read in the afternoon.

The report on education was very fine. Our school interests are on the increase. Our assessment for Millsaps College was doubled over last year's assessments.

The reports of the separate Boards show an increase in all our collections. The Columbus district paid every cent assessed against it.

The Conference is in good and growing condition.

Special reference is made to the work of J. E. Thomas at Starkville in his work for the American Bible Society.

The following is a summary of the report of the statistical secretary: Number of regular local preachers in the Conference, 119, with a church membership of 44,645; infants baptized during the past year, 679; adults baptized, 1,916; number of Epworth Leagues, 56, with a membership of 2,249; number of Sunday-schools, 450, with 2,349 teachers and 12,294 scholars; number of organized societies, including churches, 577; number of church edifices, 518, valued at $471,835; number of charges, 140; parsonages, 116; value of same, $103,306.50; district parsonages, 6, valued at $9,000. Two great schools are owned and supported by the Conference—the Grenada Collegiate Institute, valued at $40,000, with thirteen teachers, and Millsaps College, Jackson, valued at $70,000, with ten teachers.

We owe a vote of thanks, which we hereby tender, to Pastor Ramsey for the favor extended us in the matter of a Conference home. We were domiciled with our old-time friends and parishioners, Dr. and Mrs. C. H. Jones, whose cordial hospitalities and genial companionship we enjoyed immensely. We were fortunate also in having as our fellow-guests such companionable men as Bros. Kelsey, Young, O'Bryant and Luter.

How Shall the Debt Be Paid?

This question has been asked by every man of any business at some time in his career. But it is now applied to the missionary debt of the Southern Methodist Church. It may be like the debt of Great Britain, which is never to be paid, merely the annual interest to be kept paid; but even that has not been paid, and the church will eventually be bankrupt if the interest is not paid annually. But the debt must be paid; the principal is being increased by the interest, and now stands in the neighborhood of one hundred and sixty thousand dollars. One who covers his debts and never makes arrangement for liquidation is like the man who covers his sins, he can not prosper; so with our church, we must look at our debt and arrange some plan for liquidation. The readiest and swiftest plan would be to bring up our tithes and turn them into the Lord's treasury for this purpose. Let every officer from Bishops down to the humblest pastor put by a tenth and forward it for this end till the debt is paid. But if this can not be done with unanimity of action on the part of the pastors, it will fall.

The second plan is to bond the debt, issuing four per cent. bonds payable in six years. Let there every year be put aside as a sinking fund from the general collection forty thousand dollars to pay interest and retire a certain number of these bonds. In the meanwhile the debt can be pressed, and the sooner it is settled the earlier can the missionary operations be broadened. Surely in the membership of our church we have those who will invest in these bonds and assist in getting rid of this incubus gradually. The time for retiring these bonds might be made even longer—say ten years instead of six; but that would increase the payments for interest. The debt will have to be paid. The secretaries may go up and down the land quietly ignoring the debt, but it must be paid, and six per cent. interest will certainly make it increase very rapidly. While we sleep as a church, it is growing; and though we will not admit it, the millstone is on our missionary progress—it is an incubus. We may walk up and down the land with an independent, well-to-do air, but we are mortgaged for this debt. We, as a church, have let the other man walk the floor over this debt long enough; it is about time for us to pay up or go into the hands of a receiver till this amount is paid.

But maybe all thought of the payment of this debt is a violent assumption wholly unwarranted. Everybody is quiet because we are never to pay the debt. Who can collect this debt; how can it be forced out of the church? Need one pay a debt which can not be collected? Probably it is intended to take things quietly (like we have these two years gone), just pay six per cent. interest indefinitely. If such is the intention, the church should issue bonds by all means, and then pay the interest with the tacit understanding that the principal is never to be paid. It would be in excellent form for all the Annual Conferences in session to pass this resolution:

Resolved, We will pay our missionary debt.

It would be well if all our missionary specials would be wholly diverted to this end, the payment of a part of the debt—that is, if the debt is to be paid. As to the debt the question is, "Where are we at anyhow?"

LYSIAS.

Hon. Franklin Garrett.

We are pained to record the sudden death of our dear brother, Hon. Franklin Garrett. In apparent good health, he ate dinner at 4 P. M., Sunday; walked out in the yard, as was his custom, and fell dead. He never spoke or showed any signs of life, though all possible means were promptly used to resuscitate. Life was gone, not to be called back.

Bro. Garrett was one of our leading lawyers, and a man of most regular and temperate habits of life. He was a model husband and father. A true Christian, never failing in family worship. His home was a family church. He leaves a lovely Christian home—a wife and five children. Two noble boys students at Centenary College. Such homes and such families are rare. May God comfort the stricken ones and keep that home! Their pastor,

E. N. EVANS.

Monroe, La., Nov. 23, 1896.

NOTES.

Rev. C. F. Evans, D. D., has been transferred from the Western North Carolina Conference to the Louisville Conference, and stationed at Lexington, Ky.

We were pleased to meet in the city a few days since Rev. G. D. Anders and Rev. N. J. Roberts (David and Jonathan), of the Louisiana Conference.

Mrs. Mary McGee Snell was married one day last week in San Francisco, Cal., to Rev. L. E. Hall, a young Methodist local preacher of St. Louis, Mo. She was at the time carrying on a revival meeting.

The ladies of Parker Chapel gave a reception to the Methodist pastors of the city on Tuesday, the first, at the Parker Chapel parsonage. We regret that absence from the city prevented our attendance.

Rev. T. W. Adams and family passed through the Crescent City a few days since. Having finished a pastorate of four years at Moss Point, he has packed up his worldly goods preparatory to moving whithersoever the powers that be may send him.

Mr. William Reed Carradine, eldest son of Rev. Beverly Carradine, was married, Nov. 23, to Miss Alice Ingersoll, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Charles J. Ingersoll, of St. Louis, Mo. They will make their home in Baltimore, Md. May peace and prosperity attend them!

Our young friend, Bro. John T. Crebbin, steward of our Louisiana Avenue Church, and superintendent of the mission Sunday-school of that church, leaves to-day for Chicago for the purpose of attending Hahneman Medical College. We wish the young doctor God-speed.

Mr. Joseph E. Norwood, of Magnolia, Miss., will be married, Dec. 9, 1896, to Miss Kittie Maxwell, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. L. Maxwell, of Camden, Miss. The ceremony will be performed in the Methodist Church at Camden. May their pathway through life be strewn with flowers!

The numerous friends of Miss Belle Kearney will greatly regret to hear that she is quite sick in St. Louis. She went to St. Louis to attend the W. C. T. U. National Convention, but was taken sick at the very beginning, so that she did not attend a single session. Many prayers will go up for her recovery.

Mrs. Evans, wife of Rev. Charles F. Evans, D. D., died of pneumonia at Chattanooga on Monday, the thirtieth. Her remains will be brought to New Orleans for interment. This announcement will be read with profound sorrow by a numerous circle of friends. May the God of all grace sustain and comfort our brother in his sore bereavement!

We should have stated in our item of last week that "Rex" simply desired us to say that he wished Sister Cary to understand that he had done his best to hold up his end of the log; but that while we are in accord with his views, he expresses them in such a caustic manner that we feared the publication would do more harm than good.

Rev. J. A. Miller, of the Louisiana Conference, has been in bed for two weeks. He has, therefore, been unable to give personal attention to the various matters about which brethren have been writing him. He wishes the brethren to know, however, that he has efficient laymen at work making all needful preparation for the entertainment of the Conference.

We were greatly delighted to receive a few days since a contribution of $25 for our Mississippi Conference Indian Mission from that truly philanthropic woman, Mrs. Ida A. Richardson, of this city. The donation was secured through the instrumentality of our noble friend, Mrs. E. John Ellis, president of the New Orleans Indian Association. It is just like them both to do such things. The contribution is all the more appreciated in view of the fact that both these good women are members of another church. This is ecclesiastical fraternity of the right sort.

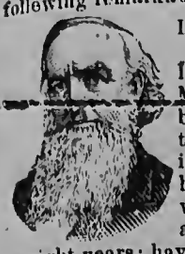
We direct special attention to the following remarkable statements:



Dear Madame:—Yours to hand. I recommend the Moore treatment because I have tried it, and know it to be just what he says it is. I was cured by it, and have remained so eight years; have known of many others being cured of the very worst cases. By all means get it.

Yours truly, W. E. PENN.

EUREKA SPRINGS, ARK., May 24, 1894.

The above is a letter written by the late Rev. W. E. Penn, the noted Evangelist, to Mrs. W. H. Watson, New Albion, N. Y.

Aerial Medication has triumphed and I am cured. One thousand dollars would be nothing compared to this. I have had bitter suffering from Catarrh. Since I had Lagrippe, the disease settled in the back of my head and my sufferings have been almost unbearable. I thank God I ever heard of your treatment, which has no equal. I can speak in the highest terms of Aerial Medication.

Miss E. S. ORR, E. Harpswell, Maine.

Deaf 25 Years.

For many years I suffered from Catarrh, which destroyed my hearing, and for twenty-five years I was so deaf that I could not hear a clock strike by holding my ear against it. I had tried every known remedy, and nothing gave me the slightest relief. I obtained Aerial Medication, and in three weeks my hearing began to improve, and now I can hear common conversation across a room; can hear a clock strike in an adjoining room, 30 feet away. I think I am entirely cured, and my hearing permanently restored.

EDWIN COLEMAN, Box 585, Wichita, Ks.

Restored His Hearing in 5 Minutes.

My age is 63. I suffered from Catarrh 10 years. Had intense headache, continual roaring and singing in ears, took cold easily. My hearing began to fail, and for three years was almost entirely deaf, and continually grew worse. Everything I had tried failed. In despair I commenced to use Aerial Medication in 1888, and the effect of the first application was simply wonderful. In less than five minutes my hearing was fully restored, and has been perfect ever since, and in a few months was entirely cured of Catarrh.

ELI BROWN, Jacksboro, Tenn.

See special free offer below.

"Whereas I Was Deaf, Now I Hear."

At the age of 69, after having suffered from Catarrhal Deafness 20 years, am truly thankful to state that I am entirely cured by Aerial Medication; my hearing, which had become so bad that I could not hear a watch tick, or conversation, is fully restored. I will verify this statement.

WILLIAM RITCHIE, Derby Center, Vt.

The late Prof. Basil Manley, of the South Baptist Theo. Seminary, Louisville, Ky., says of Aerial Medication: "I can cordially recommend its use." Write for a fac-simile of his letter.

A Deaf Man's Slate.

I was almost totally deaf 25 years; could not hear a steam whistle; had to carry a slate so that people could "talk" to me. In one week after commencing Aerial Medication, surprised my friends by discarding the slate. I steadily improved and now can hear the slightest noise and can understand conversation and public speaking perfectly.

EDW. E. WILLIAMS, Lead, S. D.

I had Catarrh 21 years, was deaf eighteen years, could not hear common conversation, had roaring in ears, dreadful headaches, green offensive discharge, bad taste in mouth, and eyes so weak I could not see to read. I used Aerial Medication in '92; it stopped the roaring and discharge from my head, fully restored my hearing and for over four years my hearing has been perfect and am entirely free from Catarrh.

JANE P. BASTIC, Shelby, N. C.

Medicine for 3 Months' Treatment Free.

To introduce this treatment and prove beyond doubt that Aerial Medication will cure Deafness, Catarrh, Throat and Lung Diseases, I will, for a short time, send Medicines for three months' treatment free.

Address,

J. H. Moore, M. D., Dept. B. I., Cincinnati, O.

The publisher of this paper has reliable information that Dr. Moore is a reputable physician, and recommends every interested reader to write him at once and investigate Aerial Medication. CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

Millsaps College Notes.

The largest enrollment in the history of the college is 205. This year we have already gone beyond the 200 mark. It is easy to see that there has not been a better session in this.

It is the custom of the faculty to arrange the Christmas holidays so that the students may go and come without Sunday traveling. This year work will be suspended Friday afternoon, Dec. 18, and be resumed Tuesday morning, Dec. 29.

The city churches have both drafted men from the Millsaps faculty to direct their Epworth League work. Dr. Muckenfuss, of the Natural Science Department, is president of the Capitol Street League. Prof. Weber, of the English Department, is president of the First Church League.

President Murrah is kept busy visiting the churches. It is seldom that he has a Sunday at home. Wednesday night before the meeting of the North Mississippi Conference he will preach in Greenville. Dr. J. A. Moore has also been giving some of his Sundays to this work. He recently spent a Sunday in Hazlehurst.

A series of public lectures has been begun. The first of the series, "The Study of New Testament Greek," was delivered two weeks ago by Dr. W. L. C. Hunnicutt; the second, "The Early History of Science," last week by Dr. Muckenfuss; the third, "The Preacher as a Student," will be given next Wednesday by Rev. A. F. Watkins.

College interest is centering just now in the new Webster Science Hall, which is rapidly approaching completion. This commodious building will contain ample room for the laboratories of the Science Department, rooms for the library and reading-room, and for the Law Department. No similar department in the State will have more satisfactory quarters than will the Millsaps Department of Chemistry, Mineralogy, and Physics. The rooms for the library are large and well placed. The Department of English has recently shown its interest in the new library by presenting as a departmental gift a large bust of Shakespeare.

The past Summer was one of great activity on the part of all the Millsaps professors. Several remained at their homes working with unabated zeal. President Murrah was continually on the go, representing all the interests of the college. Profs. Hanner, Muckenfuss and Weber were in attendance on the University of Chicago. Throughout the year Prof. Swearingen was present in Rome as a fellow of the University of Chicago in the American School of Classical Studies at Rome. During the time of his connection with this school Prof. Swearingen had the pleasure and profit of a trip into Greece. Athens and other places of interest were visited.

Millsaps College professors are investigators as well as teachers. They are often asked to contribute to the learned journals of the country. Last year Dr. Muckenfuss had two articles in the American Chemical Journal. An article from his pen on "The Dawn of Science" is expected to appear in an early number of the Southern Methodist Review. Prof. Swearingen will contribute to a volume of studies from the Classical School, under Prof. W. G. Hale, some "Epigraphical Notes." This paper will include the publication, with notes, of several new inscriptions, and the restoration and commentary on another. Prof. Weber has been making an historical study of English syntax. He has been asked to contribute to the American Journal of Germanic Philology an article on the English gerundial construction. XXX.

In the Living Present.

To be in debt is tantamount to being in slavery. It hurts churches no less than individuals. The American Foreign Missionary Society has this year wiped out its vast debt of $114,652. The Missionary Society of the Episcopal Church labored under an incubus of nearly the same amount. Now the treasurer reports entire liquidation of same. The Evangelical Association, notwithstanding recent defection, has fully paid the large debt of its missionary society and is ready to take up new fields. When will our church abandon its ostrich policy and fall in line with this happy trio?

The City Council of Boston enacted a law forbidding expectoration in the street car. Transgressers to be fined $100. It is well. Those little brown puddles do not only nauseate other passengers, but frequently soil costly dresses. Expectoration in a street car is a nuisance. Consumptives are to occupy seats near the door or at an open window.

In pedagogism women are reaching forth for monopoly in our country. Since 1880 female teachers have increased seventy per cent. The decrease of male teachers has been nearly as large. It may seem incredible, but it is true, that now 260,954 women occupy the position of teacher. It would seem that women have a special aptitude for this invocation. The number of pupils in our country is fifteen million. One per cent. of that number attend college or high school.

The Moody meetings in New York are not largely attended, but much good is being done nevertheless. He has a special gift of filling Christian workers with new zeal and enthusiasm. The papers intimate that many of his sermons are threadbare, but that his individuality never fails to achieve victory. That no one can doubt his sensible piety. That he walks with God.

A rivalry seems to have risen lately among the best medical colleges to see which one can have the hardest curriculum. Everywhere the college course has been raised to four years. Suffering humanity will be benefited thereby. The man to whom we entrust our lives should be thoroughly prepared for his task. In years gone by many charlatans disgraced the medical profession. But in this, like in any other profession, common sense is a prerequisite.

A treaty of peace has been signed by Abyssinia and Italy. The boundary between the two countries plainly specified. Italy pays $40,000. The amount is claimed as beard-bill for Italian prisoners held by King Menelik. This further bloodshed is prevented. Conspirators to the contrary have been foiled. Christianity has triumphed.

Bishop John H. Vincent has been the subject of much controversy of late. He is reported in Presbyterian papers as having said "that the divinity of Christ is not an essential article of the Christian faith." The Bishop, when apprised of these publications, declared them gross misrepresentations. That he was as orthodox as any faithful Christian could be. But some of those papers have as yet failed to publish the Bishop's correction and explanation.

ICH DIEN.

Almost a Miracle!

At the opening of present year I made the public offer of fifty dollars to be paid to any Christian charity that might be designated by any person or persons who should get a contribution for church purposes from each of the 250 members whose names were on my church roll.

Two ladies, Mrs. West and Mrs. Crisler, undertook the task, and after unprecedented labor succeeded in accomplishing the work. Their chief difficulty was in finding and getting to the members. I took my Conference collections early in the year, and got a goodly sum in cash and the subscriptions of about fifty members. The task the ladies had before them was to find and to obtain contributions from the other two hundred. If anyone thinks this task was an easy one, let him try to do the same with an equal number of members, and let me hear from him when he succeeds. The husband of one of these collectors thinks his horse ought to have a high place in horse heaven as his reward for the extra labor he has performed in the making of these collections.

Sisters West and Crisler, being deeply interested in foreign missions, will give the reward which they have earned to the McGavock Memorial School in China.

If this canvass is properly followed by timely applications from the pastor and the stewards next year, those who paid nickels this year will pay dimes, and others will enlarge their payments in proportion. Any church which gets a contribution from every member will raise all of its assessments; and not only so, but it will be a church of pervasive life. Only those who pay toward the support of the church feel a lively interest in her welfare and gladly attend her services. I have renewed my offer for another year, with the proviso, that each payment that did not exceed fifty cents this year shall be doubled next. A contribution from every member will solve the problem of church finances.

BRETHREN: I do not remember whether or not I have advised Bro. Miller of the final arrangement for the selling of tickets for the coming Conference in December. Our line, the Q. and C., will sell round-trip tickets at one and one-third fare for the round trip. Other roads interested will either sell round-trip tickets at this rate or sell one-way tickets to Ruston at full fare, giving certificate which I will honor when signed by the secretary of Conference, selling return ticket at one-third fare.

The brethren coming from points on our line should secure round-trip tickets, and from points on other lines should inquire for round-trip tickets, and if not sold should secure a certificate, so that I may grant reduction on return. Be sure to either have round-trip ticket or certificate.

I AM THINKING OF MY MOTHER.

BY FINLEY JOHNSON.

I am thinking of my mother,
And again I am a child,
As memory brings before me
The sunshine of her smile;
And the soft melodious echoes
Of her sweet, angelic voice
Still linger all around me,
And bid me to rejoice;
And often to my visions
I see her form afar,
Her loved eye brightly gleaming
From some unclouded star.

I am thinking of my mother,
And though the careless throng
Whose only God is pleasure,
May sing their siren song,
Yet my mother's gentle teachings,
Which my childhood's bosom bore,
On my heart are still engraven,
Though she is now no more;
And by every thought grows brighter,
As an infant's sinless brow,
As a whispering spirit tells me
She is gazing on me now.

I am thinking of my mother,
And every thought doth roll
Like a cool, refreshing wave
Through the desert of my soul;
And the memories that they bring me
Of the bright and happy past
Steal many a drop of sorrow
That in my cup is cast;
And Hope, with gentle accents,
Speaks softly in my ear,
That with God and the angels
I shall see my mother dear.

—New York Ledger.

From Aunt Loretta.

"This is Thanksgiving Day," as the little girl said; and how nice and fairy-like it would be to just drop in at 512 Camp street, and go flying all over the country with the ADVOCATES that visit so many of your homes, and see you all enjoying your turkey and pumpkin-pie dinners, for if there is only one pumpkin for each family in a year, it ought to be made into Thanksgiving pies, else the turkey would not taste so good.

Well, as I can not go to see you all, I will tell you about our last Thanksgiving dinner.

First, we had a secret to keep, which is about the best thing we can have about Thanksgiving dinners and Christmas presents. Our secret was that we (that is, "our crowd" and everybody else) were to take all our Thanksgiving "fixin's" to our invalid neighbor's house, and give her a surprise dinner. The children were all enjoined not to tell the secret to her children, and it was a pretty hard thing for some of them to do; but it worked well, and about an hour before the dinner hour I was sent to keep the lady in her room by some sort of adroitness, while the crowd slipped through another neighbor's yard and took possession of the dining-room. With closed doors all arrangements were made, as old Aunt Eidie was let into the secret, and she managed the children so they would not tell the mother as they saw the preparation being made. At last, as the lady's husband and a boarder was seen coming in at the gate, she arose, excused herself, went with her husband to the dining-room, and—Aunt Eidie opened the door, and there the dainty and heavily-laden table was displayed to their amazement. Mrs. G., with an exclamation of surprise, said, "Oh, Aunt Eidie!" and Mr. G. said, "What! all that?" Just then the crowd burst in from other room, and the "Thanksgiving surprise dinner" was an acknowledged success. But this year this sweet invalid lady is too ill to receive company; but we thank the Lord that she is still spared to us, and we will not forget her on this beautiful Thanksgiving Day. Mr. G. went back to the depot, and found some hungry men, among others a preacher and two doctors, and told them to go down to his house; that the ladies had taken possession, and they had the biggest dinner he ever saw. AUNT LORETTA.

Etiquette for Children.

It seems to me that too many mothers neglect this important element in the training of their children. In fact, do young folks at any time have the manners that distinguished those of two generations ago? There has been a sad decadence of manners generally within the last forty years, and unfortunately children have been affected by it more visibly than others. Gone is the old-time courtesy which children showed to their elders, especially to the aged. I remember when boys were taught to raise their hats to teachers and the girls to courtesy. In reply to all questions it was the rule rather than the exception to answer, "Yes, sir," or "No, sir," to a gentleman, and "Yes, ma'am," and "No, ma'am," to a lady. The change is to be regretted.

And yet, we can not blame the children. This fault lies with their parents, principally their mothers. We can not expect all little children, indeed, to be little Lord Fauntleroys or Eva St. Clairs, but they can be taught to be thoughtful of others, unselfish, respectful and courteous. Especially should they know how to behave politely in the dining-room. If there is one thing more than another that shows our bringing up, to use a common expression, it is our manners at table and the way we eat. Yet how often is one's whole meal made unpleasant by some unruly or misbehaved child. Mothers can not be oblivious to the misdemeanors of their children in this respect. Possibly, however, they may not realize that the responsibility of their behavior or misbehavior rests upon them; but it is as necessary to teach them good manners as that they must not eat too much.

In the first place, are not children petted too much and allowed too many privileges in these days? In many homes, the children are the real managers. They monopolize the conversation, and continually interrupt older ones while talking. This is all wrong. Such a mode, or, rather, lack of training, fosters their selfishness and vanity, and renders them real nuisances of fault finding and discourtesy.

Only the other day I was greatly shocked while visiting at a friend's house by the ill-manners of her little boy, who was not quite ten years old. Before we were all fairly seated at the table, he leaned forward upon the table, knife and fork in hand, and exclaimed: "I want some of the plum pudding, but I won't have any cake."

"You must wait, Carl," said the father. Afterwards he was helped three times to the plum pudding, though several of the older ones had a much smaller amount in consequence. I imagined that his mother might feel ashamed of his want of breeding, but the little fellow afterwards remarked to me, confidentially, "Mamma always says that I may have the lion's share of anything."

A faultless toilet, quietness of demeanor, and a willingness to wait for others, the use of the fork instead of the knife, the absence of fault finding, the proper use of the napkin, eating and drinking without making any uncouth noise, these are all to be equally observed as a part of table etiquette, and the youngest boy or girl can easily practice them. Nor should they forget the "please" and "thank you" that have so much to do toward making children attractive. I hope that mothers will see to this matter and make it a duty to educate their children in this, as well as other elements of true politeness, so that the next generation will rise up and call them blessed.—Mrs. J. M. Colby.

Shifting Responsibility.

The temptation to shift responsibility for results to the Divine Providence seems to be almost irresistible to many people; and they constantly charge to that Providence trials and burdens which they have brought on themselves. There is a class of happenings in this world which are beyond the control of the wisest and strongest; they spring from the order into which we are born, and we have no more to do with them than with the cosmic forces. These happenings are often sorrowful and calamitous; they bring loss and anguish with them, and when they come we can only bow our heads and say, "Thy will be done." There is, however, a much larger class of happenings which are the fruit of seed of our own sowing; we, and not Providence, impose these burdens and are responsible for these trials. We are constantly, however, shirking this kind of responsibility. We neglect sanitation, and when sickness comes we talk about inscrutable providences; we foolishly live at a rate of expense which our incomes do not justify, and then, when debts embarrass and distress us, we rail at the hardness of fortune and count ourselves victims of circumstances; we fail to deal with practical matters with intelligence and judgment, and when disaster overtakes us we grow bitter and call the world unjust and harsh. In a thousand ways we refuse to recognize the fruit we are compelled to eat as having grown from the seed we have planted with our own hands; and we lay upon Divine Providence sorrows and trials which we have brought upon ourselves. There is a great deal of suffering for which the sufferers are no more responsible than was Job for the calamities which smote him in the midst of his prosperity and blighted the fair garden of life which he had planted and nurtured; but there is a still greater amount of suffering which springs directly out of our misdeeds, weakness, folly, or blindness; it is hard to bear, but it is just and wholesome if, instead of holding God responsible for it, we recognize in it the harvest of our own sowing. This is a world of order and of moral purpose, and the deed can not be separated from its consequences. We are, in large measure, the creators of our conditions; if these conditions are hard, let us look well to ourselves before we rail at fate or charge our misfortunes upon Providence.—The Outlook.

Sunshine and Smiles.

The hygienic value of sunshine in the home is too well known to need any argument or elucidation in this place, but the sunshine which comes from good cheer is of quite as much importance, as it is the foundation-stone upon which rests the entire fabric of home happiness and comfort. With it many things which might otherwise prove exceedingly annoying become of little moment and are passed off as petty.

Cultivate the smile. We say cultivate it, because it is not natural to all of us to smile when matters occur which try our patience or vex the soul of a housekeeper. But it is remarkable how much annoyances diminish and dwindle when once the habit of smiling at them becomes confirmed. Above all, children should be early taught this important lesson, that they may learn to shed trouble as the duck's back does water, but also that they may be a constant delight to the household, instead of the very trying little animals that they may be if they go to the other extreme.

Another valuable fact is that one who habitually smiles away the unbidden tears inevitably draws toward him the good-will of all with whom he comes in contact; and an ever-widening circle of friends is one of the most desirable acquisitions in life, and tends as well to make the home happy and cheerful. It has been said that "a man may smile and smile, and be a villain still," but that is only an exception to prove the rule good.

Cultivate the smile; smile often; smile at all things; and difficulties will disappear, and the tasks lighten very materially.—American Homes.

With some people, discontent is a constitutional infirmity. Born under the malign star, they have never been able to travel beyond its influence. Change of condition fails to improve their disposition. Like sea water, prosperity serves to increase rather than allay their thirst. The trouble is not in circumstances, but in themselves. If put back in paradise, they would be dissatisfied with their primitive furnishings. How such unfortunate persons would ever be able to get on in heaven is more than we are able to tell. The very perfection of the place would be a source of annoyance to them, and the sight of perfect people would be sure to excite in them the most unheavenly feelings. The prime need of such persons is a constitutional regeneration.—Rev. David Sherman, D. D.

It is from small seeds dropped into the ground that the finest productions grow; and it is from the inborn dictates of conscience and the inspired principle of duty that the finest growths of character have arisen.

"What is the value of this estate?" said a gentleman to another, with whom he was riding, as they passed a fine mansion and through rich fields. "I don't know what it is valued at, I know what it cost its late possessor." "How much?" "His soul." A solemn pause followed; and well it might—he to whom the words were spoken had himself all his good things in life. His friend added: "Mr. ——, the late possessor, was at one time apparently a religious man, but worldly success was his soul's ruin. On his deathbed he himself said so."

HYGIENE.

The People's Food.

So much for the development of the food investigations. But what are the results already gained, and what is to be expected in the future? One thing which is brought out by these and other investigations is that we make a fourfold mistake in our food economy.

1. We purchase needlessly expensive kinds of food. We use the costlier kinds of meat, fish, vegetables, and the like, when the less expensive ones are just as nutritious, and, when rightly cooked, are just as palatable. Many do this under the impression that there is some peculiar virtue in the dear food materials, and that economy in their diet is somehow detrimental to their dignity or their welfare. And, unfortunately, those who are most extravagant in this respect are often the ones who can least afford it.

2. Our diet is apt to be one-sided. It often does not contain the different nutritive ingredients in the proper proportions. We consume relatively too much of the fuel ingredients of food—those which are burned in the body and yield heat and muscular power. Such are the fats of meat and butter, the starch which makes up the larger part of the nutritive material of flour, potatoes, and sugar, of which such enormous quantities are eaten in the United States. Conversely, we have relatively too little of the protein or flesh-forming substances, like the lean of meat and fish and the gluten of wheat, which make muscle and sinew, and which are the basis of blood, bone, and brain.

3. We use excessive quantities of food. This is true not only of the well-to-do, but of many people in moderate circumstances also. Part of the excess which is bought is thrown away in the wastes of the kitchen and the table, so that the injury to health from overeating, great as it may be, is doubtless much less than if all the food we buy were actually eaten. Probably the worst sufferers from this evil are the well-to-do people of sedentary occupations—brain workers as distinguished from hand workers. Not everybody eats too much; indeed, there are some who do not eat enough for healthful nourishment. But there are those, and their name is legion, with whom the eating habit is as vicious in its effect on health as the drinking habit, which is universally deplored.

4. And finally, we are guilty of serious errors in our cooking. We waste a great deal of fuel in the preparation of our food, and even then a great deal of the food is very badly cooked. A reform in the methods of cooking is one of the economic demands of our time.—From "The People's Food—A Great National Inquiry," in June Review of Reviews.

Eat Apples.

A physician in New York advocates eating a raw apple just before going to bed; and a veteran physician in this city declares he owes a great measure of his health to the eating one, two, three apples at that time—really almost his chief meal of the day, for he is the slenderest of eaters at all other times. The New York physician adds of the apple: "It is an excellent brain-food, because it contains more phosphoric acid in easily digestible shape than any other vegetable known. It excites the action of the liver, promotes sound and healthy sleep, and thoroughly disinfects the mouth. This is not all. The apple agglutinates the surplus acids of the stomach, helps the kidney secretions, and prevents calculous growths, while it obviates indigestion, and is one of the best preventives known of diseases of the throat."—American Cultivation.

Choosing the Worse.

It is said that a philanthropic citizen in an Eastern city, moved with compassion for the pale, thin, languid store-girls, started a restaurant where this class could get the best of healthy food at prices far below those charged at the ordinary restaurant. But this philanthropic citizen soon found that the girls he desired to help would not patronize his establishment. They preferred to spend their money for pie and custard and other indigestibles, rather than take at cost the wholesome fare he had provided for them. They would spend as much again for unwholesome food as the best of wholesome food would have cost them.

This is only another example of what the experience of men, and especially of God, has been throughout the ages. God provides an abundance of pure, wholesome water for men to drink, and furnishes it free of cost; but how many men prefer that which destroys health, consumes wealth, and blights and destroys their souls—alcoholic beverages! There is an abundance of the best reading matter furnished in these days—good, wholesome, stimulating mind-food; yet men and women, boys and girls, prefer to spend money for that which not only does not feed the mind, but which actually poisons the moral nature. God offers men salvation without money and without price. He even urges it upon men; but, like the girls in the case above cited, they prefer to pay money and waste time for that which ruins and damns them, rather than to take salvation as a free gift. It is the persistence of God in continuing his efforts, as well as the wonderful cost of those efforts as seen in the gift of his Son, that helps us to understand the love of God for us. And the fact that men do not appreciate, will not accept, may even oppose our efforts for them, should not discourage us in our efforts for their salvation.—Pittsburg Christian Advocate.

Driving Truth Home.

One hears it said often that some public speaker or orator excels in that he has a faculty for driving truth home. This was well said of a preacher who recently visited us from across the sea. His wit and humor was not the mere outward structure of pleasantry, but was the very essence of it, because he always used it to drive some truth home. We hear this phrase used often in allusion to great speakers, and it occurs to us as a particularly apt one. To say that truth is driven home is to infer that it has been away from home, and that it has, forsooth, a tendency to wander from its own fireside. Some one, therefore, is needed—many, in fact—to encounter it abroad and drive it back where it belongs. But it is not, therefore, to be concluded that truth is uncongenial to the mind, for do we not enjoy more than anything else to have it driven back? We, perhaps, know the truth full well; nearly all know it, or, at least, feel its power when it is presented in a form that appeals to each one; but it does not stay vividly before us without continued presentation, for we are prone to forget and lose the acute realization. No man—teacher, preacher, or writer—can add to or take from it; but he can, by his own method, if he have a message from God to deliver, drive it back to its home—the mind; and, like the pebble dropped in the crystal lake, whose little circle of effect extends to the farthest shore, so a truth that is once driven well home will perpetuate its influence even into the farthest reaches of time.—Guardian.

Gives Them Something to Do.

A trite saying which can not be too often repeated is, that the surest way to enlist the sympathies of a people in a cause is to enlist their hands in it. We watched a young preacher who started out to see how much of other people's church work he could do, in addition to his own. He had conceived the humane, if not brilliant, idea that if he could bear the people's burdens for them, they would find church life worth living, and their devotion to its interests would steadily increase. The result was inevitable. The less the people had to do, the less interest they took in the church and in the man who was doing their work for them. In a little while there was a general complaint that the pastor was not doing enough, and when at the end of the year the poor fellow dragged himself in on the home stretch, and dropped with an attack of nervous prostration, it was remembered that for months he had been his own official body, aid society and sexton, and had largely footed his own bills.—Richmond Christian Advocate.

When they shall have got through telling us what we need not accept in Bible teaching, they will have ample use for all the wits they seem to possess in showing us there is anything we need accept, if they then have a case left that we should accept anything.—Selected.

OBITUARIES.

MORRIS—On Friday morning, Nov 6, 1896, the messenger of death once again visited our community and wafted on high the soul of Mrs. LENORA MORRIS. She had been sick for a long time, and was confined to her bed for three months. Her sufferings were great, but she bore them with a Christian resignation, and waited patiently for the summons of God. She had been a consistent member of the Methodist Church for years. She died happy in the love of her Savior. One more tie in heaven; one more standing on the golden shore to welcome the loved ones when they cross the "valley of death" and enter the home of eternal bliss. This world has lost one of its radiant lights, but heaven has gained a bright jewel which shall shine forever.

Her place can not be filled, and death has cast a shadow of gloom over her home. While her children have been called upon to pass under the rod of affliction, their hearts are much grieved with the thought that mother will be with them no more. She is not dead, but has only taken her everlasting flight into the realms of happiness.

Mrs. Morris leaves six kind and affectionate children to mourn her untimely death. She desired to live, but was not afraid to die; so those of her friends who are in Christ do not mourn her loss as those who have no faith, for they have the blessed assurance of meeting her in the bright world beyond.

Loving friends tenderly laid her sleeping body to rest, to await the resurrection of the just. May the blessings of heaven rest upon the bereaved family, and lead them to that home above where no farewell tears are shed!

Something Good in Dixie

Please understand I am a woman of Indiana, not of Dixie, but do appreciate this good; delight to acknowledge it that all persons afflicted as I have been may know there is hope and happiness for them. I had been a stammerer from childhood; sometimes as unable to speak as though dumb. Had tried several cures, but all of them failed. Then, as a last resort, I tried Rev. G. W. Randolph's Cure for Stuttering or Stammering, and now am CURED. Four days after complying with the requirements of this Cure, I received by mail that which enabled me to talk with such ease and infinite satisfaction, which, to one who endured the affliction as long and severely as I have is a "veritable gladness in the soul." I have never seen Rev. Randolph, but have found him to be a man of his word, and is highly recommended in church circles, also by State officials. His Vocal School, or Institute, is located at No. 463 Poplar Street, Memphis, Tenn., and to persons going to this school a cure is GUARANTEED. The Cure by mail gives the same happy results, if instructions are carefully followed, which ever children can do, and those needing the benefit of this GOOD will find him so considerate in his terms they need not suffer these afflictions longer. Submitted for the sake of the unfortunate.

During the month of January, 1897, there is to be held in Tampa, Fla., a convention for the purpose of urging upon the government the advisability of providing for the fortification of Southern ports as rapidly as possible.

President Cleveland will make Princeton, N. J., his home after March 4. He has purchased a residence in that city. He chose the place on account of its nearness to New York, and because of its quiet and undisturbed home life.

According to recent reliable information, three of the Central American republics have formed a confederation, to be known henceforth as the Greater Republic of Central America. To this arrangement, Honduras, Salvador and Nicaragua are parties.

The blizzards are causing great destruction in the Northwest. In the Dakotas whole herds of cattle have been frozen. Montana records show about nine degrees below zero. Denver is freezing, and huge drifts of snow are piled up over Colorado. Heavy snows have fallen in Iowa, Missouri and Nebraska. No such cold snap has ever been known in the Northwest.

The streets of the snow-bound Dakota towns are being cleared as rapidly as possible. The extreme cold weather has now frozen the snow until the immense drifts have reached the proportions of gigantic icebergs, and dynamite is being used to blast these out of the way, ordinary picks and shovels being unable to make any impression on them.

FOREIGN.

The salary of President Diaz of Mexico is to be raised from $30,000 a year to $50 000 a year. The "rise" takes effect from Jan. 1, next.

The London Daily Telegraph, which claims to have the largest circulation of all daily newspapers in the British Empire, is about to be converted into a joint stock company, with a capital of $15,000,000.

The special committee of the French Chamber of Deputies has adopted the proposed increase in the sugar bounties as well as in the sugar import duties. The new bounty is to be 3½ to 4½ francs, and a tax of 2 to 2½ francs is imposed upon imported sugar. These figures are evidently in addition to the existing bounties and taxes.

The United States consul at Vienna, Austria, Mr. Judd, calls attention to the way in which the Austrian government is discriminating against American trade. He states that the Austrian manufacturers of glucose complained to the government that American glucose was underselling their product and injuring their industry. The government has accordingly raised the duty on glucose from 7½ to 8 florins per 100 kilos.

NEW MONEY MAKING INVENTION.

I am so thankful to Mrs. Wymer for her experience. Being out of employment, I ordered 2 dozen of the New Patent Aluminum Cases, for attaching photographs to tombstones, from M World Mfg. Co., Columbus, O. Cases are indestructible, will last forever and make a beautiful appearance on any monument. Anyone can attach on in 2 minutes. I sold 5 the first day, profit $12. In 5 days my profits were $49. Everybody is glad of a chance to buy, as they are handsome and get so cheap. Sister made $19 last week selling elegant Aluminum Door-plates and house numbers for the same firm. Anyone can do as well if they try. JOHN C. B——.

To the Members of the Louisiana Conference.

DEAR BRETHREN: For several years past I have been handling as statistical secretary all your statistical reports to the Annual Conference, and I find a lack of uniformity and in some cases great carelessness shown; hence this request.

1. Please be careful to make all figures plain. Do not leave the secretary in doubt as to what figure you intended to make.

2. Avoid all unnecessary punctuation of your figures. One good brother, whose report is now before me, wrote the value of his parsonage $15.00 when it should have been $1500.00. The same brother reported the value of his church $400.00 when the Minutes of the previous Conference showed that church reported as valued at $8000.00.

3. Be careful in reporting your membership to see that only the net increase or decrease is added to or subtracted from the membership of last year. One brother reports: Members last year, 123; additions, 30; removals, 7; total members this year, 153. He is one of many. In a case like this the secretary does not know what to do. He does not know which figures to take as a base in making his corrections, as the works are rearranged at almost every Conference.

4. In the blank—"Number of Societies in the Charge"—report only church organizations, and in the next blank—"Number of Churches"—only the number of church buildings.

5. Under the "Value of Other Church Property" report the value of other pieces of land owned by the church in the bounds of the charge, the value of organs, lights and other church and parsonage furniture not included in the "Value of Churches" and "Value of Parsonages."

6. In your "Financial Report" on amounts assessed do not report amounts raised by Sunday-schools, Epworth Leagues or Foreign Missionary Societies, etc., as a padding to the regular collections you have made. There is a place to report them. Let them stand on their own legs.

7. In the space marked "Education" report the collection for Centenary and Mansfield Colleges, and in the two blank spaces below report the collections for General Board of Education and Paine and Lane Institutes.

8. A blank will be provided on which to report the moneys raised and expended by the Epworth League, Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, Woman's Parsonage and Home Mission Society, Other Objects and Printing Minutes.

9. Let the Epworth League report include all moneys raised and expended by the League for League requisites, books, furniture, entertainment, charity and help, missions, etc.

10. Include in the reports of the woman's societies those of the Juvenile Societies, and make a foot note calling attention to the fact.

11. Under "Other Objects" report all moneys raised by the church and not elsewhere reported — such as special collections for missions, drouth sufferers, poor, etc., and incidental expenses (lights, fuel, etc.), ministerial help, etc., and moneys raised by aid societies and not elsewhere reported.

If there is anything in your report to which you wish to call special attention, make a foot note of it.

Trusting that you will give careful attention to this request, thus insuring the reliability of our statistical reports, I am,

Your obedient servant,

WM. G. EVANS.

New York is to have an office building fifty-nine stories high, with a six-story cupola. It is to be built by English capitalists, headed by Jacques & Weldon, of Lancashire. No less than $35,000,000 will be expended on this cloud-piercing structure. The building is to be on the corner of Tenth avenue and Twenty-fifth street. The building is to be 108 feet square; there are to be 5 900 rooms. The estimated rentals are placed at $120,000 a month.

Gen. Booth has announced that the Salvation Army is to extend its operations over the whole of the Malay archipelago. The movement will be directed from the army's headquarters in Australia.

Threatened Consumption.

A TYPICAL CASE OF CATARRH CURED BY DR. HARTMAN'S FREE TREATMENT.

A farmer's wife has been troubled from childhood with catarrh. Until within the last few years she has not been treated for it. But it has become so much aggravated that she consults her physician. He treats her, and she perseveres faithfully, without avail, for months. Then she tries a physician in the city. Although his charges are exorbitant, her husband gladly pays them; but she gets no better. The farmer, in despair, sees his wife growing paler and weaker every day. A cough sets in, and consumption is near.

At last they read about Pe-ru-na. The husband writes to Dr. Hartman, and receives an encouraging and sympathetic answer. They continue the correspondence all the while she takes Pe-ru-na, receiving new advice and assistance in every letter. Her symptoms leave her one by one. Her color returns. Her cough ceases. At last she is well. In her gladness of heart she writes to Dr. Hartman, anxious to have her cure told to others, that they also may be saved.

Such is the history of a typical testimonial used by Dr. Hartman in his books. One of these books will be sent free to any address by The Pe-ru-na Drug Manufacturing Company, Columbus, Ohio.

Child-Life in China.

China! How little it means to the people in this land! How few, how very few, find it convenient to sacrifice even an hour from their passing novel to learn just a little about what China really is, and what are her needs!

We sing around the graves of our buried children in China, "Asleep in Jesus, blessed sleep, from which none ever wake to weep," but what consolation has the poor heathen mother? How often have I seen her in China place her sick child on a bench, or on the mud or brick floors beside the door, not daring to hold the little one, for fear it might die in her arms, and the evil spirit, which it is supposed to be, enter into the mother. The mother-love was just as strong as in a civilized mother, but she was so bound by superstition that whilst she cried, "My child, oh, my precious child," she must also neglect it in its dying hours and pretend that she cares nothing for it, because she has been taught to believe that it was nothing but an evil spirit come to trouble the home, and if it were treated too well, would return again. "Do not grieve," a heathen friend said to me after the death of my own child; "it was not your child that was thrown away, it was nothing but a 'yao ming ti kuei'" (an evil spirit come, seeking a life).

When a child dies in Peking, it is stripped of its clothes and thrown into the street. In the early morning, before the people begin to stir, an ox cart goes about the city and gathers the little bodies, which are thrown into a waste place outside the city.

On Winter evenings, as I have picked my way along the filthy streets of Peking, I never failed to see children of all ages lying on the streets, some huddled in close to the brick walls, others lying against the sellers' stalls trying to protect themselves from the cold north wind. Poor, miserable, famished little mortals, without a home, with nothing but a rag or two to cover them, lying in the frost or snow, sobbing with hunger and cold. No "Home for the Destitute" there, no "Orphanages" or "Children's Hospitals," where benevolent ladies vie with each other to see who can make her room the most beautiful. Nothing for hundreds of poor Chinese men, women and children every night during the year, but the streets of Peking. What wonder that during the severe Winter months hundreds die of cold and starvation. It is not the fault of the people that the rivers overflow their banks, leaving hundreds of thousands of people yearly without homes, without hope. They flock to the cities to try and find a living, and, alas! they only find death on the streets.

God pity poor China! How can a civilized country even conceive of her condition? Words fail to portray it. How often have I thought, since coming home, that what is wasted in this fair, beautiful land would mean plenty in poor, frugal, patient, long-suffering China.—Woman's Missionary Friend.

Death from Use of Tobacco.

"Where does Cleopatra's body rest?" Scarcely a layman who would not answer: "Why, in Egypt!" After her cajoleries, her wiles, her life of incense, if not rose-scented, love, Cleopatra was laid in one of the loveliest tombs that have ever been fashioned by the hand of man. But what a change 2,000 years has brought about! To-day an ugly mummy, with an emblematic bunch of decayed wheat and a coarse comb tied to its head—a mere roll of tightly swathed dust—lies crumbling in a hideous glass case at the British Museum, London. It is Cleopatra, the once great queen, a Venus in charm, beauty and love.—Presbyterian.

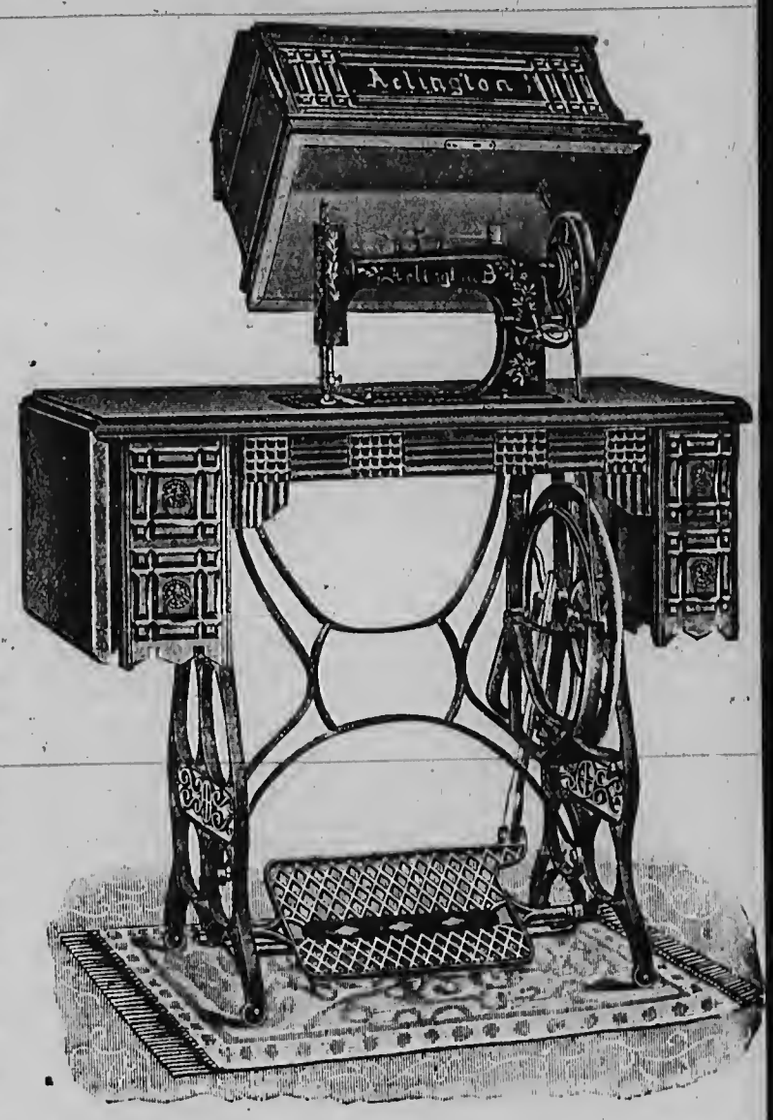
Our Machine Offer.

New Improved High-Arm "Arlington B" Self-Threading Sewing Machine

A recorded certificate of warranty for 10 years accompanies each machine. The "Arlington B" is complete in every detail, combining all modern and late improvements, such as automatic bobbin winder, self-threading shuttle, self-setting needle, upper spring tension, etc.



The "Arlington B" self-threading sewing machine has a large high-arm, its mechanical appearance is perfect, its adjustment is absolute, positive take up, convenient foot-rest, with the best style furniture, either oak or walnut; in addition to which each machine is furnished with the best steel combination attachments free, as follows: One tucker, one fool ruffler, one set of plain hemmers (five different widths up to seven-eighths of an inch), one blinder, one shirring plate and one under-braider, packed in a handsome velvet lined case. It is also furnished with one foot hemmer, one screw driver, one wrench, one oil can with oil, one gauge, one package of needles, six bobbins and one instruction book.

THE HEAD is strong and substantial; has large space under the arm for handling bulky goods, is finely japanned, and protected by a hard finish, has so few bearings and friction points that it is easily oiled and kept clean.

NEEDLE BAR is round, with adjustable bearings polished and fitted, insuring great wear and can run a long time without oiling. It has a slack dip motion, relieving the strain upon the thread when the shuttle is passing through the loop. Using the adjustable take-up, and controlling the threads perfectly on all grades of work.

IMPROVED AUTOMATIC BOBBIN WINDER which is so positive and reliable in its action that an imperfectly wound bobbin is an impossibility. So simple that a child can easily operate it. This valuable attachment renders possible a perfect control of shuttle tension.

SELF-THREADING—THE "ARLINGTON B" is self-threading, requiring no change from light to heavy work. Uses double thread, and makes the lock stitch.

THE NEEDLE is the same as used on the New Home machine, and is self-setting both as to height and position with reference to shuttle, with short blade and long shank, insuring great strength; finely polished.

SELF-THREADING SHUTTLE—A perfect steel cylinder shuttle with delicate and perfect tension, open at one end to allow the bobbin to be inserted without displacing any of the parts, runs loose in the shell without spring centre or cobalt bearings, thus insuring an even tension; can be threaded in the dark, and easily understood.

LOOSE PULLEY for winding the bobbin without running the machine requires no change of adjustment, nor is it necessary to remove the work from the machine.

PARTS SUBJECT TO WEAR are made of the finest steel, case hardened, light and noiseless and are very durable.

OUR OFFER.

To anyone, not now a subscriber to this paper, who will send us $20 50, we will send the machine and the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE one year. To old subscribers we make the following offer: Pay your subscription to April, 98, and send us $18.50 additional, and we will send you the machine.

We allow purchaser to test the machine for ten days. If at the end of ten days you are not satisfied, you have only to drop us a postal card, and your money will be refunded.

IT PAYS.

It pays to wear a smiling face
And laugh our troubles down,
For all our little trials wait
Our laughter or our frown;
Beneath the magic of a smile
Our doubts will fade away,
As melts the frost in early Spring,
Beneath the sunny ray.

It pays to make a worthy cause,
By helping it, our own;
To give the current of our lives
A true and noble tone.
It pays to comfort heavy hearts
Oppressed with dull despair,
And leave in sorrow-darkened lives
A gleam of brightness there.

It pays to give a helping hand
To eager, earnest youth;
To note, with all their waywardness,
Their courage and their truth;
To strive with sympathy and love
Their confidence to win;
It pays to open wide the heart
And "let the sunshine in."

Correspondence.

Around the Mediterranean.

BY DORA M. JONES.

I.—ACROSS THE BAY TO LISBON.

On reaching the quay at Lisben we got into the carriages that were waiting for us, and drove through a handsome square, the Plaza Commerciale, through the business quarter of the town, and past the market. Here the houses were high and fine, and the streets fairly wide. The market was curious, with the great piles of grapes and melons on the stalls, and the women in print skirts, woollen shawls, and gay silk handkerchiefs tied round their heads, watching us with amusement in their black eyes. Then we found ourselves in another square, with exotic-looking plants and fountains and statues, and from this there ascended a very steep hill, up which we were laboriously tugged. Indeed, the streets of Lisbon generally realize Dickens' description of the streets of Bath, where he says that they are like the perpendicular streets a man sees in a dream which he can not get up for the life of him. At the top of this particular hill of difficulty were the Botanical Gardens, very prettily laid out and planted with trees, in the shade of which we were glad to rest for a season, and to enjoy the magnificent view of Lisbon spread out before us.

What struck us most in driving through the town, fresh from the gray North as we were, was the wealth of color everywhere. Nearly all the houses were color-washed—here a salmon pink one, the next bright blue, then one with the lower stories heliotrope and the upper dark green. Many of them had narrow green-painted balconies nearly all the way up. On all the balconies and at all those windows black-haired Portuguese women were lounging in loose print wrappers or blouses. Coming down from the gardens, we halted in the middle of a more than usually precipitous street, opposite a doorway in a yellow sandstone wall, which we entered after our guide, without the least idea where we were going, crossed a courtyard, dived through several passages, and found ourselves at last in the Church of St. Roque.

Outside, this building much resembles a Nonconformist meeting-house of the old style; inside, it is square and graceless, with a gorgeous high altar, however, and elaborately decked chapels on either side.

The most remarkable of these is the chapel of St. John, with its lapis-lazuli pillars, and panels of colored marble, its gilt bronze-work, and the marvelous mosaics, which are said to have cost nearly £7,000,000, and to be among the finest in the world. They are copies of paintings of Guido and Michael Angelo in the Vatican of Rome.

After lunch we drove along a boulevard parallel with the quay. Troops of girls, with baskets of fish or trays of small commodities on their heads, trotted past us, in print jackets, short print skirts, and their shawls slung girdlewise round their hips. They walk with a free, swinging tread, as if the place belonged to them, and seemed innocent of corsets.

Another terrible climb brought us to the Royal Palace, standing in a sort of park, planted with olives, acacias, eucalyptus, etc., which had a ragged and forlorn look to our English eyes. Here, as everywhere, except, perhaps, in the newest quarter of the town, we received an impression of melancholy and decay. The quays along which we passed had a semi-deserted look; the soldiers in their baggy canvas uniforms, the public buildings and conveyances, even the private carriages, were utterly wanting in that smartness, neatness and attention to detail which form part of the English idea of comfort.

Our next visit was to the Church and Convent of Belem (or Bethlehem), in a poor and straggling suburb, from which a tramcar runs to Lisbon. They were built near the old Moorish town of Belem to celebrate the discovery of Vasco de Gama. As we passed up by the side of the church we could see where the plaster had fallen off it in great patches at the time of the earthquake. We passed into a lovely court built in an imitation of the Moorish style, with cloisters of fretted stonework all round and a gallery above. Beneath the gallery the most hideous and extraordinary gargoyles projected into the court, which was full of green-fronded palms, grey aloes, and rosy-blossomed oleanders, thrown into rich relief by the warm yellow sandstone of the building and the unclouded blue of the sky above.

At the further end of the court were collected a crowd of little boys belonging to the Foundling Hospital, which has its home here in the precincts of the old convent—urchins in brown jackets and black caps, all dressed alike and chattering like a crew of parrots. In the long dining-room adjoining their evening meal was being set out by attendants robed in a kind of brown sacking. We also saw the kitchen, where great hunks of meat were being cut up for cooking, pots and pans boiling on the immense stove in the middle of the room, and a man and a boy in blue jackets devouring some very thick broth in a corner. All looked up and grinned as we passed. The dormitories had a very conventional look—rows and rows of narrow white beds in immense bare rooms; but the youngsters looked thoroughly happy and well cared for. We then went on to the church, which holds the tombs of Catherine of Braganza, Charles II.'s Portuguese wife, of Vasco do Gama, the great Portuguese sailor, and of Camoens, the poet of the "Lusiad." It is rather a gloomy building; the choir in a high gallery opposite the high altar, which glows like a jewel in the dimness of the church, only lighted by the narrow stained-glass windows high up in the wall, through which the light struggles, tinging the slender sandstone pillars, with their elaborate arabesque devices, red and orange and blue.

Coming back, we traversed the poorer quarters of the town, and were struck with the stately carriage of the women. One old dame, with a brown water pitcher on her head, might have stood for a St. Anne of Murillo's. We saw another sitting on her doorstep, cooking the evening meal on a little portable stove, with one arm around a black-eyed baby, to hold it back from personal investigation of the compound in the saucepan. Some of the women on the doorsteps were basket-weaving, but most of them were merely chatting and dozing; others were lolling at the windows with their arms on the sills. The dark-eyed children were bewitching in their little brown or blue shirts. Nothing can give an idea of the quaintness of the pink and blue houses, with the door and window frames badly in want of paint. Staggering up and down the hilly streets, we saw men carrying baggage on a yoke, and other porters with badges. The Lisbon porters are supposed to be exceptionally powerful, and it is said that one of these men has been seen to pick up a grand piano and carry it off on his head. But as dear old Sir John Mandeville is not the only traveler who has been known to diverge from strict accuracy, we give this statement for what it is worth.

The sun was going down in a red sky and twilight coming quickly on, as it does in these latitudes, when we stopped at the gate of the English cemetery. Avenues of solemn cypresses stood up darkly against the red flame of sunset, and between the white tombstones glimmered. We soon found the grave of poor Henry Fielding, who sleeps beneath an epitaph crediting him with all the virtues; but we had more difficulty with the tomb of Dr. Doddridge, which we discovered at last in a thicket of geranium. Both poet and novelist came out to Lisbon broken men, in the hope of gaining some benefit from the delicious climate of the place, but in vain. Doddridge died almost immediately on landing, and Fielding's respite was not much longer. It seemed strange and sad that, perhaps, the most typically English of our great writers should lie in a foreign land.

The Statistical Craze.

BY BISHOP A. G. HAYGOOD, LL.D.

Gideon was stronger with his three hundred than with the great multitude that first rallied to his standard. An army may be too big for effective fighting. Darius found it so at Arbela, when the young Macedonian with his trained phalanxes overthew him. Xerxes learned his lesson at Thermopylæ. For hard fighting Cæsars' Tenth Legion was worth more than a raw mob of a hundred thousand men. Yet nothing is easier than deception in the consideration of mere numbers. The church itself is easily deceived by figures. One feels easy, complacent, perhaps jubilant, when told that his church enrolls more than a million and a quarter of names. It is important to consider quality as well as quantity, whether we speak of a cotton crop or the membership of the church. If the quality of an article be bad, the more there is of it the worse for all concerned. In any particular church, if the average of religious experience and character be low, the greater the membership the weaker the church. One hundred thorough going Methodists are worth more for anything that concerns mankind than a thousand slack-twisted Methodists. If the thousand were all card-playing, dancing Mammonites, they would not, so far as religion goes, be worth anything at all. But they would be efficient allies of the great enemy of God and man. We grievously misunderstand these things. A worldly Methodist—trampling down the law and despising the spirit of his church—may be counted on the roll, but he is a curse to his church. If he were honorable and intended to continue in disobedience, he would withdraw.

We are now passing through the statistical era. It is a sort of craze. To not a few the study of statistics is a matter of absorbing interest. Pity we can not avoid extremes. There should be a mean of common sense between the careless man who guesses at everything, and the statistical slave, who lays himself out, body and soul, to get his figures right.

The statistical octopus does not confine his embraces to the church; scientists, publicists, insurance actuaries, swear by columns of figures. The statistician has become a scientist. When we deal with mere things the best tests and gauges may be in mere numbers; in the nature of things "the state of the church" can not be determined by any study of mere numbers whatsoever.

Mere figures do not give us the spiritual strength of the church, whether we speak of a society or a denomination. The spiritual forces can not be measured as we measure the power of a steam engine. The divinest energies of the church can in nowise be compressed into statistical columns. As well try to gauge a man's brain force by weighing his body on a Fairbanks' scale.

We can not estimate even the liberality of the church by the figures and footings of all our treasurers. A small amount may mean liberality; a large sum may indicate meanness. The figures and footings do not show what the givers had left. No measure of giving is worth considering that counts only what is given. A thousand dollars given may not mean any sacrifice to the giver; the widow giving her all when she gave "two mites," was liberal; she "gave all she had." Our Lord has made this too plain for discussion. Although the rich "derided him" then—as they do to-day—they were wrong and he was right.

Gauging the worth and fidelity of a pastor by mere figures is, of all methods of judging men, most delusive. The conditions under which pastors do their work are so utterly different that they can not be rightly judged by their reports of numbers or dollars. We may admit that if John Smith always fails to "bring up his collections," no matter on what field he labors, that he is a failure as a collector; if he never reports any increase in the membership, that he is not a success as a revivalist. This is only saying in another way that John Smith is inefficient, and proving by figures what did not need proving.

Very often the raising of fifty per cent. of an assessment indicates to the All seeing more labor and fidelity than twice the assessment raised under different conditions. Sometimes a report of a membership doubled is only proof that one has reaped what another sowed. This writer could give many illustrations. A may have worked faithfully for four sad years to build up his church. It took him two years to recover ground lost by a careless, superficial predecessor, who, perhaps, brought in a hundred half-converted people. Then followed two years of faithful work in discipline and instruction. The mere figures during the four years make a poor showing for him, but without him that church would have died the death. B, it may be, a man of not half his force and worth, succeeds him. A great revival—growing out of the four years of devoted toils—follows, and the next Conference listens with delight — compliments abounding and promotion expected—to the figures which tell of B and his "marvelous work" in doubling the membership. As to A's work, God knoweth, and let not the Conference forget.

Some sober-minded and observant men have said to this writer of late that out of the importance attached to mere figures in the reports of preachers temptations arise. They say if a man feels that his work is to be gauged and his future determined by numbers, that he will be tempted to seek numbers. It is possible that herein is the explanation of the sad fact that so many are brought into the church who are really irreligious. Some preachers this writer has known who reported their salaries in full when twenty per cent. of the steward's allowance had not been paid. They could not bear to appear "short" and unappreciated, and counted it as given because they gave it up. And some paid a percentage to their presiding elder on what they reported and did not get, that they might say, "All collections in full, Bishop." Such things ought not to be, and we should not so use statistics as to sorely tempt good men to do wrong.

Perhaps we overdo the whole statistical business. David had an experience in "numbering Israel" of a sort to be remembered. Have we forgotten it?—Nashville Advocate.

The Religious Forces of the United States.

This is the title of the first volume of the American church history series, published by the Christian Literature Company, New York, with Dr. H. K. Carroll as the author. In this volume Dr. Carroll has devoted much time to a very careful preparation of some interesting statistics and facts, which every lover of truth should be anxious to know. It would seem that the information given may be relied on, since Dr. Carroll had charge of the division of churches in gathering up the religious statistics for the United States census of 1890.

The population of the United States, by the census of 1890, was 62,000,000. Of this number 56,992,000 are said to be Christian. Counting out the Jews and other religious bodies not Christian, there are in the United States but 5,000,000 non-religious persons. Many of these have, no doubt, marked religious beliefs. So we see that, comparatively, there are few persons in this free land altogether indifferent to religion and religious institutions.

There are 111,036 ministers and priests, and 165,297 different societies. Some of these are very small, a few having but twenty-five members in the whole country. There are 142,000 church-buildings, or places of public worship, with seating capacity for 43,000,000; so the church has kept pace with the increasing population in providing places of worship for the people. Of course, these church-buildings are not evenly distributed, and in many places there is a great lack of churches. We clip the following paragraphs from the Homiletic Review:

"A most significant and encouraging fact brought out in the census is with regard to the comparative growth of country and church, and also with regard to the comparative growth of Roman Catholic and Protestant Churches. During the ten years between 1880 and 1890 the population of the country increased 24.86 per cent., but the Christians increased during that time 38 per cent. That this was not due to immigration alone, which was very great from Roman Catholic lands, is shown by the fact that while the Protestants increased 42 per cent., the Roman Catholics increased but 30 per cent.

"It is a significant fact that while the value of church property owned by the Roman Catholics in the city of New York is $8,124,750, that owned by the Presbyterian Church in all its branches is $9,354,000. The entire valuation of church property in New York City, including all religious bodies, $54,670,600.

"It has been repeatedly stated in the daily press and on the convention platform that the people do not go to church as they used to in former days. It has been constantly affirmed by pessimistic ministers that religion is dying out; that the Sunday newspaper and the Sunday excursion and the general indifference to religion produced by prosperity and worldliness were rapidly emptying our churches. But the facts of the late census are dead against any such gloomy view as this. The outlook, as well as the present condition of religion in this land, is most encouraging and hopeful.

"The Protestant Church, in spite of the enormous immigration of the past twenty-five or thirty years, is growing a great deal more rapidly than the Roman Catholic Church. There are seven Protestants in this country to one Catholic, and there is but little danger that the ratio will be materially changed in favor of the Catholics for many years to come. The Roman Catholic Church loses every year from its ranks a very large number, more than it gains from Protestant sources. We need not fear Catholic domination in this country.

"The 19,000,000 Protestants constitute a mighty army. In all matters of public interest good men should combine.

"The immoral element that centers in our great cities is very small when compared with the entire population. There is no reason, even in our centers of population, why the corrupt and depraved element should have control of public affairs. If the good men, who are vastly in the majority, would only assert themselves and do their duty as citizens, our cities could be rescued from the hands of corrupt and unscrupulous demagogues.

"We should remember that even though one in every three of the population is a Christian, there is much work for the church yet to do.

"Two out of every three are not yet professed Christians. A vast number of these men and women are directly under the influence of the church, and from their ranks its numbers are repleted every year.

"While the church of Christ has gone steadily on in this free land, increasing in strength and power every year, its rivals have had but little, if any, growth.

"And finally, the outlook, as judged by the last census, is most encouraging and hopeful.

"Never before in its history has the church of Christ been so aggressive. Never before has it been so thoroughly organized for active work both at home and abroad. Each decade it is seeking to adapt itself to the needs of the times. The Christianity of to-day is a more practical Christianity than that of the past. It has more faith in itself and in its divine Lord and Master. It believes in the power of the gospel which it preaches to meet all the moral and spiritual needs of man. In the twentieth century, which is before us, it is to do its best work for Christ and for humanity."—Wesleyan Advocate.

How to Reach the People.

The wonder is that the people go to some churches at all. I was in one lately where there was a little talk by the pastor about a revival. Sitting on a back seat I comprehended the reason of failure at a glance. Young men were there; the members of the church passed them in the aisles without recognition. There was no cordiality, no hearty handshake and "God bless you!" The pastor himself did not set the example. Oh, what is the use of talking about a revival in such a church? There's a more cordial welcome for those young men at any one of the four gates of hell than in that church. They will be welcome at the dance, welcome at the theatre, welcome at the card-table, welcome at the rum shop. Cordiality everywhere but in the church of God! There are churches in this land, thank God! where a young man can not show himself without a dozen cordial hand-grasps and a dozen "God bless yous!" falling on his ear.

When such cold, worldly, heartless churches have wailed out, "Why don't the people come to church?" until they die out altogether, some little one of God will become a thousand" who has learned the lesson, "Not by might, nor by power, but by my spirit, saith the Lord." Let us begin anew. Go for every sinner you see. Get them to Christ. Keep the prayer meeting hot. Make it a refuge for sinners seeking salvation. Stop your wailing! Lift that shout of victory like Jehoshaphat's army, even before the battle comes on!—Chaplain McCabe, in Zion's Herald.

THE FAULTS OF OTHERS.

In speaking of another's faults,
Pray don't forget your own.
Remember, those with homes of glass
Should never throw a stone.
If we had nothing else to do
Than talk of those that sin,
'Tis better to commence at home
And work right from within.

We have no right to judge a man
Until he's fairly tried;
Should we not like his company,
We know the world is wide.
Some may have faults, and who has not -
The old as well as young?
Perhaps we may, for aught we know,
Have fifty to their one.

I'll tell you of a better plan,
And find it works full well;
To find your own defects to cure
Ere others' faults you tell.
And though t some time hope to be
No worse than some I know,
My own shortcomings bid me let
The faults of others go.

Now, let us all, when we begin
To slander friend or foe,
Think of the harm one word may do
To those we little know.
Remember, curses, chicken-like,
Sometimes to roost come home;
Don't speak of others' faults until
You have none of your own.

"Brother Oakheart" in Post Oak Circuit.

"Brother Oakheart" was an exhorter, who had been licensed mainly in view to the blacks, for whose edification he seemed to be constitutionally and religiously gifted." Though his speech was not with enticing words of man's wisdom, he was curiously eloquent within the comprehension of his responsive audience. "Massa Oakheart was on his high hoss; he really was dis day," said Uncle Clay. "He piled hisself on hisself. He made the cold chills run over and over me. The hair of my head snapped like frost. I speaks de raal truf!"

The above are the first intimations we have of Oakheart: The former description by the author; the latter by a typical old negro, pious, demonstrative, effusively hallelujahish, and an habitue of the Amen corner presumably, with "a brain entranced, and full of ecstacies." Shortly after this allusion, Oakheart appears as an interlocutor with some other worthies (and unworthies) on the heathen, and on sending them the gospel. He makes some very striking remarks: "We may well talk about the heathen. They will soon be in their graves. We count them like bugs by the million, and value them by quarters and dimes. But, mind, as I tell my colored brethren, those very same heathen will string us millstone necklaces out of our small change, and sink us among great black waves, the swell of five hundred storms of wrath, which will dash a wrecked man, and search for him over the the spot where he goes down." In the same interlocution, he refers to a talk he gave his negro congregation which is here quoted, in part: "I told them I had a mind to get from the secretary a Chinaman's skull, a Fejee skull, a Guinea's skull, and a skull from Kamtschatka, and hang them up on pegs for collection boxes; that when I took a collection for each kind of heathen, I should like to see the wretch of a church member that would divide one dime among all those skulls."

"Yes, my dear, 'Heartoak,' as the boys call him, does more—gaunt as he looks, in his clean, bad-fitting, home-spun copperas clothes—than any wealthy man in our church. He has his house hung round with missionary certificates, as he has a way of making each one of his children, as soon as they come into the world, a life-member of the parent society. Poor as he is, he manages to have the frame for the picture and the cash ready, waiting the arrival of the young life-member."

"Well, certainly," said they all, laughing, "Bro. Oakheart is a curious man. And," added one, "what a curious preacher!"

"Yes! and I call him a very fine preacher notwithstanding the words of his own manufacture," said the old lady. "He makes the truth plain and very impressive to everybody, especially to the blacks. I once heard him preach on the cause of missions, and shall never forget it. He said that missionary collections should always be lifted in the skulls of dead heathen. I have never put a dollar into the missionary plate since, without asking myself, 'How much would you give, were it the silent appeal of a heathen's skull?' It is true, Brother Oakheart sometimes steps from the sublime to the ridiculous, but much oftener from the ridiculous to the sublime. I wish there were more men full as curious, or, rather, that he was not so singular in his generosity. But, my dears, I am doing all the talking," etc.

Our quotations give one a good insight into the man: his zeal, liberality, his proneness to hyperbole, his procreant and powerful imagination, elevation of sentiment, power of language. Let us never forget that he was licensed mainly in view of the blacks, for whose edification "he seemed to be constitutionally and religiously gifted." There is a world of significance in the latter branch of the sentence. Full of inevitable implication of the dramatic propriety of his mission, and vindicatory of, enjoining, even compulsatory of his style.

Time rolls on, and Oakheart preaches his missionary sermon, which came off once a year. "Whenever he preached or exhorted—for he was only an exhorter—a large number of white persons were present; and it give him an opportunity, which he improved, of hitting the white brethren while preaching to the colored." It is to this sermon we especially commend our readers. Quoting in part mars it. It is too long to give in full. It is a great sermon—in fact, indescribable. Remarkable for its vivacity and conciseness; a perfect profusion of images; and they rush, in their delivery, like a leaping torrent. It is a picturesque riot, an intrepid magniloquence in style: alliteration, puns, a delicious grotesque, latitude, opulence. He sketches the different heathen nations. He touches Africa thus: "Then Africa, where you all come from; there the people are thick as leaves on the trees, and are counted only as the sands of Sahara; there they sell each other, and eat each other on a pinch; there, when a king dies, they kill two or three dozen of his servants to go along and wait on him. There you have boa constrictors and lions, and ourang-outangs, and elephants, and every sort of terrible things—but no missionaries, except a few crouched up in one corner." The reader will not fail to notice the startling effectiveness of this abrupt by-play of his thought, in his allusion to the missionaries: So impressive in its contrast, so forceful in its naked simplicity.

Borneo is touched thus: "Then Borneo, where every respectable citizen has a string of skulls and gourds hanging up in the porch to dry. Plants half the year, and pirates half; lays by his crop, rows off in his war canoe, he and his neighbors; lands on some island, burns their houses, robs and murders till he is satisfied, comes home, gathers in his crop, and triumphantly dries his skulls." Imagine such imagery, such vigor of style, in language delivered in the impassioned manner of an exhorter inured to the yearnings of African susceptibilities, "with the ingenious boldness of an extravagant invention." Here is a specimen of his strenuous alliteration, bristling with antitheses: "Thus by one thing and another, cannons and Bibles, merchants and missionaries, treaties and traffic, guns and guano, men of war and men of God, the world has been opened," etc. It is sublime in parts, and has its trip-hammer strokes of sarcasm, as witness this one: "By every unpitied barbarian that dies, the church saves money."

It is to be hoped that some one will read this sermon; for, to repeat, it is indescribable And no one will exhaust a comprehension of its merits at one reading. The art of making a negro exhorter the vehicle of the delivery of such a sermon must be apparent to every one conversant with dramatic keeping. The sermon is replete, for one thing, with what the French call "gaiete de coeur"—rife with high animal spirits. Everyone knows how endeared to the African character are vigor of delivery, imagery, stentorianism, abandon. Macaulay goes to the length of asserting (substantially) that the more culture, the less vigor and play of imagination. Hence the fitness in the pitch of this sermon. One must figure a man built up to stentorianism, hyperbole, vehemence, as a necessity of environment. And both Cicero and Quintillian emphasize the necessity of adaptation to audience in a speaker.

There is not only an artistic or elocutionary propriety in Oakheart's style, but a higher propriety in the sanctions of spirituality and the weight of theme. Fire, vehemence, are imperative when men commend the sending of salvation to barbarians. A man should not exclaim "Fire!" at the dead of night in a whisper, when human beings may perish, unless he should yell it in tones of startled horror. In this view much of the tone of Oakheart's sermon is pertinent to any audience; but its utterance to an African one is in a truer conception to artistic and dramatic keeping. And to meet every aspect, a white audience, as if with reference to this point, are made to hear the sermon.

Another point of great import is, that Oakheart preaches to his African audience, and, by a polite and cautious indirection at the whites, hitting the latter over the heads of the former. It would have been offensive, and would have miscarried, had he preached directly at the whites in certain respects. For instance: "I am glad, brethren, that you are black, and not white; that you are poor, and not rich; that you are the servants, and not the rulers; that you are owned, and not owners. You will have enough to answer for without answering for the blood and bones of the heathen, their miseries and murders, their dreadful darkness, old ulcers, devil-worship, and grub-worm soup."

I am by no means sure that, in the selection of such a personality as Oakheart, the author has not chosen a mouthpiece who could more fitly give vent to certain characteristics of his own individuality: An appetency for the picturesque; a most penetrating succinctness and vivacity of style; an almost rage of the imagination and fury of imagery, fretful at the fetters of language—asyndetonic at times; a soaring spontaneity; a scathing scorn of the niggardliness of support accorded missions, which could not be couched in direct delivery to whites; a penchant for the indirections of ingenious innuendo, which relentlessly hunt out meanness from all its labyrinths of tergiversation; an absorbing consecration to the cause of missions, inspired by travel, study, an acute and wakened sensibility in their behalf, which found a fitter medium for the expression of its volume before an African audience than a white one, which latter often discountenances flowing emotionality as effusiveness, and somewhat "off-color" to cold-hearted decorum.

It is not difficult to imagine an exquisite sense of the fitness of an African audience as the opportunity for the outflow of that torrent of intoxicated imagination and animal spirits which so characterized Aristophanes: That surging hubbub and hurly-burly, the wild frolic, the tireless extravagance, "the motley riot of a carnival, the whole world turned topsy-turvy." Before no other audience in this world, except an African one such as Oakheart preached to, could such a spirit be acceptable or in keeping. And Aristophanes could have said nothing too wild—given a religion in accord with theirs.

Whatever we may think of the author of "Post Oak Circuit," we must either concede him the possession of an exhaustless fountain of animal spirits, or the inventor or creator of one who has. This trait of soul, both chastened and electrified, in high spiritual moods, finds itself the possessor of loftiest facilities and felicities. But, the "mota mens" is too deep a theme here and now.

Report of W. F. M. S. of North Mississippi Conference.

"Woman's service in giving the gospel of Christ to the secluded, down-trodden women of the world" has been said to be the most significant and far-reaching event of this century in its power for good to the human race. That this work might be carried on systematically and effectively the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of North Mississippi Conference was organized at Columbus, Miss., April 24, 1879, auxiliary to the Woman's Board of Missions, which was organized scarcely a year previously. This organization, consisting of a small band of earnest, consecrated women, held its first annual meeting at Verona, March, 1880, with five pioneer auxiliaries—Aberdeen, Columbus, Macon, Greenville, and Verona. Christian womanhood had not then caught the divine inspiration of that great command, "To teach all nations;" so our growth, at first, was slow, the whole amount contributed the first six years being $3,413.39, only a little more than was contributed in one year later on. But, step by step God ordered the way, and advancement has steadily marked the years as they passed. Eight years after organization two missionaries, Lula Lipscomb, of Columbus, and Addie Gordon, of Port Gibson, were sent to Shanghai, China, by the Woman's Board. Since this time Dr. Annie Walter and Viola Blackburn, of Holly Springs, have filled places in the hospital at Soochow, China, and the school at San Luis Potosi, Mexico, respectively. Of the 66 foreign missionaries from the 35 Conferences, North Mississippi has furnished 4.

In 1890 we recorded our first day-school, the Lucy Fant Memorial School, supported by Mrs. J. T. Fant, of Holly Springs. Scholarships have been supported for years, and we have enrolled life members and honorary life members, besides having carried various other lines of special work. The Helen Finley scholarship ($2,500), filled two years by Viola Blackburn, and the Mary Rogers Stone room ($100) in the Scarritt Bible and Training-school, are grand memorials of our work.

Of the 35 Conferences of the Woman's Board, we stand fourth on the list of contributors, having remitted since organization to our treasurer at Nashville $32,420, and $5,865 to the treasurer of the Scarritt Bible and Training-school. At last annual meeting we had 139 societies, with a total membership of 2,178.

Our whole Conference is ringing with missionary enthusiasm; membership is increasing rapidly; but the need of the hour is for even greater zeal. Much yet remains to be done before our assessment of the $100,000 and the 100,000 new members is all balanced up.

Our hearts tremble lest we fail. It is also feared by officers of the Woman's Board that they will not be able to meet the next quarter's appropriations. Christian friends, we must not fail. Remember, our failure means disappointment and distress in foreign fields, delay in sending tidings of salvation to perishing souls. Oh, let the call for new members and for larger offerings ring throughout our Conference in our monthly meetings, through the press and through our correspondence.

May God help us to do our whole duty and to measure up to our opportunities!

A Little While.

BY THEODORE L. CUYLER, D. D.

In our Lord's last conversation with his disciples before his betrayal and crucifixion, he said to them, "A little while and ye shall not see me; and again a little while and ye shall see me—because I go unto the Father." Before them was the bloody tragedy on Calvary, and forty days after that his ascension through the vernal air to heaven. They should see him no more in earthly form. But in another little while—in fifty days thereafter—he should come again by his Holy Spirit in the wondrous baptism of power at Pentecost. He was then to be glorified by the Holy Spirit in the hearts of his disciples. Jesus Christ is with his people now; for did he not promise, "Lo! I am with you alway?"

Those sweet, tender words "a little while" have deep thoughts in them, like the still ocean at the twilight—thoughts too deep for our fathoming. They breathe some precious consolations to those whose burdens are heavy, either of care, or poverty, or sickness. If the prosperous can enjoy their prosperity only for a little while, neither shall the mourner weep much longer, or God's poor children carry much longer the pains or privations of poverty. The daily toil to earn the daily bread, the carking care to keep the barrel from running low, and the scanty "cruse" from wasting will soon be over. Cheer up, my brother! "In a little while and ye shall see me," says your blessed Master, "for I go to prepare a place for you." O the infinite sweep of the glorious transition! A few years here in a lowly dwelling whose rent it was hard to pay; and then infinite ages in the palace of the King of kings. Here a scanty table and coarse raiment soon outworn; yonder a robe of resplendent light at the marriage-supper of the Lamb. Let this blissful thought put new courage into thy soul, and fresh sunshine into thy countenance.

I sometimes go into a sick chamber where the "prisoners of Jesus Christ" are suffering with no prospect of recovery. Perhaps the eyes of some of those chronic invalids may fall upon this article. My dear friends, put under your pillows these sweet words of Jesus—"a little while." It is only for a little while that you are to serve your Master by patient submission to his holy will. That chronic suffering will soon be over. That disease which no earthly physician can cure will soon be cured by your Divine Physician who, by the touch of his messenger, will cure you, in an instant, into the perfect health of heaven! You will exchange this weary bed of pain for that crystal air in which none shall say, "I am sick;" neither shall there be any more pain. Not only to the sick and to the poverty-stricken child of God do these tender words of our Redeemer bring solace. Let these words "a little while" bring a healing balm to hearts that are smarting under unkindness, or wounded by neglect, or pining under privations, or bleeding under sharp bereavements. I offer them as a sedative to sorrows and a solace under sharp afflictions—"a little while and ye shall see me;" and the sight of him shall, in an instant, wipe out all the memories of the darkest hours through which you made your way into the everlasting rest.

A few more struggles here,
A few more conflicts o'er;
A little while of toil and tears
And we shall weep no more.

These words of the Master are also a trumpet-call to duty. In a little while my post in the pulpit shall be empty; what manner of minister ought I to be in fidelity to dying souls? Sabbath-school teacher, in a little while you shall meet the young immortals in your class for the last time! Are you winning them to Christ? The time is short. Whatever your hand finds to do for the Master, do it! Do it, Aquila and Priscilla, in the Sunday-school! Do it, Lydia, in the home! Do it, Dorcas, with thy needle, and Mary in the room of sickness and sorrow! Do it, Tertius, with thy pen, and, Apollos, with thy tongue! Do it, praying Hannah, with thy children, and make for them the "little coat" of Christian character which they shall wear when you have gone home to a mother's heavenly reward.

Only think, too, how much may be achieved in a little while. The atonement for a world of perishing sinners was accomplished between the sixth hour and the ninth hour on darkened Calvary. That flash of divine electricity from the Holy Spirit which struck Saul of Tarsus to the ground was the work of an instant; but the great electric burner of the converted Paul has blazed over all the world for centuries. A half hour's faithful preaching of Jesus by a poor itinerant Methodist exhorter at Colchester brought the boy Spurgeon to a decision, and launched the mightiest ministry of modern times. Lady Henry Somerset tells us that a few minutes of solemn reflection in her garden decided her to exchange a life of fashionable frivolity for a life of consecrated philanthropy. Why cite any more cases when every Christian can testify that the best decisions and deeds of his or her life turned on the pivot of a few minutes? In the United States Mint they coin eagles out of the sweepings of gold-dust from the floor. Brethren, we ought to be misers of our minutes! If on a dying bed they are so precious, why not in the fuller days of our healthful energies? Said Gen. Mitchell, the great astronomer, to an officer who apologized for being only a few minutes behind time: "Sir, I have been in the habit of calculating the tenth part of a second!"

Our whole eternity will hinge on the "little while" of probation here. Only an inch of time to choose between an eternity of glory or the endless woes of hell! And as a convert exclaimed in a prayer meeting, "It was only a moment's work with me when I was in earnest," May God help us all to be faithful only for a little while; and then comes the unfading crown:

A little while for patient vigil keeping
To face the stern—to wrestle with the strong.
A little while to sow the seed with weeping,
Then bind the sheaves and sing the harvest song.

A little while to keep the oil from failing,
A little while faith's flickering lamp to trim,
And then the Bridegroom's coming footsteps hailing,
We'll haste to meet Him with the bridal hymn.

How to Help Our Pastor.

That is the strongest church whose members have learned best how to help the pastor. Other churches may be much larger, wealthier, more widely known, and able to make greater contributions to the benevolent societies, but that is the strongest, most useful church which is most of a unit because of the intelligent, helpful loyalty of its laity to its pastor. If such a church be studied, several things are evident.

One is that the members seek to be active, each in his own way. Some have natural gifts qualifying them to serve in counsel, others are best adapted to relieve the needy, others to teach in the Sunday-school. Each has examined himself and has given himself to that branch of work which he can do best—not always, however, that which he prefers. But each also seeks to be active in the pastor's way. That is, he accepts the pastor as the leader and guide, consults with him, accepts his suggestions and thus promotes the harmony of the whole church work, which some one mind, naturally the pastor's, must organize and control.

Another is that differences of opinion are not allowed to subtract from mutual efficiency. Those who do not agree with the pastor nevertheless credit him with the best aims and the noblest spirit. They will co-operate with him loyally, even when they are not as confident of the results as he. In a certain church the pastor desired a change of policy and method in respect to an important department of work. He consulted a leader in the church who felt strongly that the change must be mischievous. But after a thorough discussion he said to his pastor: "I see that you have studied this matter carefully, are convinced that the proposed change will be wise and safe, and are very desirous of having it made. I disagree entirely with you at present. But in such a matter it is right for you to have your way, and I will do my best to co-operate with you and make the change a success. If it fails, you will be convinced, as I shall be if it succeeds." When this man's spirit exists in a church, what can hinder its usefulness, in spite of any mistakes by the way?

Is it necessary to add that every Christian should pray earnestly for the pastor, should hold his honor dear, and, if possible, should defend him faithfully, when adversely criticised? One word more—help your pastor when you are sure that he has made some mistake, not by condemning him in your family or before others, but by going straight to him for a frank, brotherly, prayerful talk. Whether you part on terms of entire agreement or not, you will separate with a truer and better mutual understanding.—The Congregationalist.

The most of the unkind criticisms which we utter against other people serve only to reveal the hardness and coarseness of our own natures. Censure is easy; epithets of abuse and denunciation are numerous in every language. It takes little effort to indulge in malignant thrusts.

The highest is not to despise the lowest, nor the lowest to envy the highest; each must live in all and by all. So God has ordered that men, being in need of each other, should need to love each other and bear each other's burdens.—G. A. Sulu.

Remember now and always that life is no idle dream, but a solemn reality based upon eternity and encompassed by eternity. Find out your task; stand to it; the night cometh when no man can work.—Carlyle.

No policy in the end shall thrive that traverses the Word of God; and that can never be politically right which is morally or religiously wrong.—Thomas Guthrie, D. D.

A Christmas Trip.

The thousands of Texans who came from the South Atlantic States find much pleasure in reverting to the happy days of long ago, when they were children, and often they awake at night to recall those scenes of yore which gave to life a charm, and which now come in later years as visions of joy. There is a tender spot in every heart for the old home, and the memories which cluster about the dear old spot are solaces in the weary, weary struggle we make day by day to build in our new Eldorado a home to which our children in future time will turn, as we turn now to the old place where our loved ones in the evening of life await the final summons.

The Texas and Pacific Railway Company again offers you the opportunity to go "back to the old home." Round-trip excursion tickets will be on sale from all points on the system on Dec. 21 and 22, 1896, to points in the Southeastern States, at one fare for the round trip, tickets good 30 days from date of sale. See your nearest ticket agent for further information, and do not fail to send eight cents postage to the undersigned for a copy of the finest publication on Texas ever issued, to show to your friends at home.

FROM THE WORK.

FRENCH MISSION.

It is fitting at the end of our Conference year to give a general summary of the results of our year's labors in this peculiar field, and of its needs, etc. The visible results have far surpassed our most sanguine expectations. God's Spirit has been with us in convicting, converting, and sanctifying power, and consequently many minds have been illumined, and many stony hearts made as "hearts of flesh" and are now "rejoicing in the hope of the glory of God." We have had 28 accessions by profession of faith. Of this number 8 had been baptized in infancy by the priests of the Romish Church. Have baptized 8 infants. At Arnaudville we have brought and paid for lumber to build a house of worship. At the Ile aux Cane the initiatory steps to above end have been taken.

As to the needs of this field (first) we need men that can speak English and French. It is not enough that a preacher be a man of piety, though this qualification is absolutely requisite. He should, if possible, be a man of universal knowledge, having his mind richly stored with all the information he can acquire on sacred and civil history, sciences and arts, and the system of nature in all its departments. The latter, though the lesser, is necessary in order to command the respect and attention of the outside world and be fully equipped to meet them on a human level. The former is the most vital, for a teacher must know the way, and "be able to teach." The gospel must be presented, not only in a judicious, but in an alluring manner; so preached as will incite hearers to the imbibing of the Heavenly Spirit and be constrained to choose and act in strict conformity to his holy requisitions. As instruments in God's hands, we are never to lose sight of the nature of his kingdom, and the potent Factor which awakens, convicts, converts, and causes the emerging from a state of darkness or nature into a state of grace or light. The peculiar offices of the Father, the Son, the Holy Ghost should be preached upon fully, clearly, and adequately. As far as my observation has extended, the preaching on the subjects has awakened many to the deep spirituality of the invisible kingdom and of its harmonious and beneficent effects. A distinctive line must be drawn between cold formality and the "worship of God in spirit and in truth." In attacking the errors of paganism we must be sure that we are animated and actuated by the Divine Spirit, and our hearers will, if not convinced, be anxious to hear us "again concerning these matters:" in other words, preach the gospel in its native simplicity and purity, and in a spirit of love.

The key of salvation should be distinctly given to inquirers. This is necessary, as a great majority of the population of this State, by instruction or by force of the laws of association, are staking their salvation on St. Peter's willingness to unlock heaven's gates for them. On preaching on Christ's words to Peter, I always get the attention of my hearers, and then explain, and prove, that the key is the gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ, and that this key was given to all called of God to preach and found in the Word of truth; I always illustrate by Paul and Silas handing the key of salvation to the inquiring and trembling jailer. I have never known one awakened on these keys to go to sleep again — spiritually speaking. Try it, brother!

2. We must get the Word of truth, or Bible, into as many of the homes of these people as possible, and freely circulate French literature and pamphlets. During this year I have circulated the above freely, and I feel that only eternity will be able to disclose the good thereby accomplished.

I can not close this communication without trying to impress upon all our duty to the French elements of our State. At our District Conference I took the position (when addressing the Conference on the needs of the field) that Centenary College would never measure up to her full duty until these people, their suffering and needs, were fully brought to bear upon the minds, hearts and consciences of her young preachers studying for the ministry. There is no plausible reason why our Conference and college in the course of five years could not educate a corps of French preachers sufficient to man Southwest Louisiana. What I said then I have had no reason to retract.

And now, changing the subject to a personal one, allow me to thank the brethren for all past kindness. As known to some of the brethren, I sever my relations with the Methodist Church at the coming session of the Conference to enter the ministerial fold of the Presbyterian Church; but in doing so I shall never forget the mystic ties that bind God's children together nor the care received from them in the infancy of my Protestant Christian life. I am not unmindful nor ungrateful for the many expressions of kindness of which I have been the recipient. I feel, and know, that many have been my mistakes and imprudences, and my superiors, knowing my early Catholic training, have been very lenient, kind and gentle in nearly every instance. In conclusion, I pray God's richest benedictions upon my brethren and ask an interest in their petitions at a throne of grace.

H. W. WALLACE.

Rev. H. M. Banks, Nov. 30: "We closed the best meeting last Tuesday ever held at Mt. Hermon Church. Began with my fourth quarterly meeting and lasted for eleven days, resulting in 20 additions to the Methodist and eight to the Baptist. Both churches greatly revived. Bro. Wallman, L. P., of Natchez, Miss., did the most of the preaching. He preached with power."

Rev. I. T. Reames, Lafayette, La., Nov. 27: "We are moving along quietly in some respects, and not so much so in, at least, one other. The ringing of saw and hammer disturbs the silence from 6:45 in the morning until 5:45 in the afternoon. For two weeks ten workmen have been very busy endeavoring to get our new church ready for service before the meeting of the Annual Conference, and from present indications they will succeed. The building is handsome—a nice tower reaching over 75 feet toward heaven—and when furnished will be worth $2 500 or $3,000. We have had several additions to the church this year, and the work generally is in a healthy condition. Conference is almost here. And who of us are ready for it? Those who are may answer. 'Pray for us.'"

Rev. J. White Davis, Pastor, Harrisonburg charge, Louisiana Conference, Dec. 2: "Since last December we have taken into the church 11 members, dismissed 7; net gain, 4; baptized 18 children; visited 170 families; made 1,186 visits; spent 125 nights away from home, and traveled about 2,100 miles. Our finances are very much behind, owing to great monetary depression among our people. We have much to thank the Lord for in this part of his vineyard, and we think most of the people are appreciative of his blessings."

When a large corporation is zealous in the interest of its employees' souls, attention is attracted. It is a startling innovation. A friend has brought us facts concerning two large manufacturing plants at Corinth, Miss., which are of a most readable nature. As a good work following the labors of a layman evangelist, fifteen minute morning prayer meetings were instituted at these mills, by the proprietors and workmen. These meetings begin the day's work, and are largely attended. A short time ago the anniversary of the beginning of this movement was held. It was a most enjoyable occasion. Ample preparations were made. There were plenty of seats, a full orchestra, a well-trained choir; and "two of the largest assemblages ever gathered in the history of Corinth." Short addresses were made by all the city ministers. It is a pleasure to quote these words from the Memphis Commercial-Appeal commenting on the event: "It certainly marks an epoch in the history of manufacturing interests in this country when the employees, led by the proprietors, come together to ask God's blessing on the work of the day." The firms are well known as large and most successful ones. That they have the good will and respect of their workmen is a matter of course. Let students of the vexed labor problem think on this plan; so simple, and yet so mighty.—Mid Continent.

A man may almost read himself into skepticism if he only reads one side of the controversy between Christianity and unbelief, if he reads nothing but Darwin, Huxley and Spencer, and others who rejected the supernatural claims of the Christian faith, and who never turns to the answers and arguments which have convinced men equally as able and candid as the skeptical writers. If the questions between faith and unbelief are not threshed out to the bottom; if all that is known is a little stale science, or shallow metaphysics, or unhistorical dogmatism; if the last article of a smart writer is accepted as the rational and intellectual theory of the universe; it is surprising that the result, a skeptism superficial and unreal, without earnestness and that profound sadness which any man who thinks and feels must experience if he reaches the conviction that the glories and hopes of Christianity are all unreal? Much of the skepticism of to-day is uneducated unbelief; it needs, in the first place, not more faith, but more knowledge, a profound knowledge of the deeper problems of faith and unbelief, and of the literature of the Christian faith.—Dr. Barrett.

One dollar at compound interest, well invested, at the end of a century will be worth a thousand dollars; at the end of two centuries will be worth a million dollars; at the end of three centuries will be worth a billion dollars. If man can make so much out of invested funds, how much can God make? How much do you suppose the dollar you give to Christ will be worth two or three centuries after this, when you behold its glorious fruit in the millennial age?—Christian Alliance.

Education is leading human souls to what is best, and making what is best of them. The training which makes men happiest in themselves also makes them most serviceable to others. —John Ruskin.

Sarsaparilla
Is the One True Blood Purifier. All druggists. $1.

Hood's Pills are the best after-dinner pills, and aid digestion.

What an inconsistent thing a human being is. Men go with dread through narrow, noisome streets, of the corners, and look frequently over their shoulders. And the things of which they are most afraid are perhaps a hundred times less dangerous than the thing they think of not at all. The assassin's stiletto is less deadly than the little, insignificant, invisible germs, the bacilli of consumption. This is the thing that causes more deaths than all the wars and pestilences. This is the thing that causes one-sixth of all the deaths in the world. It finds easy lodgment in a body made weak by wasting sickness or debility from lack of proper nourishment. Impure blood is a fertile resting and breeding place for them.

The man who allows his health to decline, who allows his blood to remain impure, and who feels that he is growing weaker every day is holding out an invitation to consumption and to death. When signs of weakness and failing first appear, they should be met by taking Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. This is a medicine for people who have lingering coughs, whose lungs are weak—either by reason of colds or heredity. It builds up strength immediately. It purifies and invigorates the blood, tones up the digestion, strengthens the nerves, makes the sleep sound and refreshing. It assists the body in throwing off all disease germs. Druggists are sometimes unscrupulous enough to try and sell something else in its place. Nothing is "just as good." Nothing is nearly as good.

No home library is complete without Dr. Pierce's "Common Sense Medical Adviser." This handsomely illustrated, thousand-page volume will be sent free, paper-bound, to all who will send twenty-one one-cent stamps, to pay the cost of mailing only, to the World's Dispensary Medical Association, Buffalo, N. Y. If a handsome, French cloth binding is desired, send ten cents additional (thirty-one cents in all).

DR. PIERCE'S PLEASANT PELLETS FOR CONSTIPATION. Forty sugar-coated granules, in a little two-inch vial—the only safe and comfortable cure for constipation, biliousness, headache, sour stomach, heart-burn, foul breath and palpitation of the heart. They do not gripe, nor cause any other unpleasant feeling. One little "Pellet" is a gentle laxative; two a mild cathartic.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

FIRST DAY.

Conference convened in the Methodist Church at Port Gibson on Wednesday morning, at 9:15 o'clock, with Bishop Hendrix in the chair. After singing the hymn, "And are we yet alive," and the reading of II. Cor. iv, as a Scripture lesson, the Bishop led in prayer. The roll was then called by Dr. C. G. Andrews, who was unanimously re-elected secretary, with Rev. J. A. B. Jones as assistant. Geo. H. Galloway, J. G. Galloway and W. L. Linfield were elected statistical secretaries. C. F. Emery was made recording secretary, and W. M. Stevens, railroad secretary.

Nine o'clock was fixed as the hour for meeting, and one for adjournment.

After the appointment of the various committees, the Bishop expressed his regret at being kept by the Formosan War from attending the Conference session of last year, over which he was expected to preside. The Conference was delighted at the news communicated by Bishop Hendrix, that Dr. Fearn, the medical missionary to China from this Conference, has been licensed to preach since reaching China, and will now minister to the souls as well as to the bodies of the heathen.

The following named brethren were next introduced: Rev. Mr. Brownlee, pastor of the Port Gibson Presbyterian Church; T. B. Holt, representing the Publishing House; W. B. Palmore, editor of the St. Louis Advocate; T. B. Clifford, of the North Mississippi Conference, representing the Methodist Orphanage; Rev. J. E. Riddle, who was announced as a transfer from the Louisiana Conference, and Dr. W. B. Murrah. The Doctor then read a very gratifying report on the condition of Millsaps College. Two hundred students have been enrolled this session. Twenty of these are preparing for the ministry; thirty are the sons of preachers. The Law Department recently established has already twenty-seven matriculates, and is self-sustaining. The Science Hall is now complete, and ready for use.

Reports from the Mission and Church Extension Boards and from the Book Agents were next read and referred.

The report from Secretary Steel, of the Epworth League, shows that there are now 3,000 chartered Leagues, and 150,000 members.

A communication from the American Anti-Saloon League, requesting the appointment of two delegates to a national convention, to be held next year at Washington, D. C., was read and referred.

Question 20 being then called a large number of the brethren made reports, and their characters were passed. Geo. P. McKeown, John A. Moore, M. A. Thurman and W. A. Terry were admitted on trial. Robt. Lee Phillips, T. B. Cottrell, R. A. Sibley, Jr., and Geo. M. Hull were continued on trial.

The names of the following were referred to the Committee on Conference Relations: J. W. Sandell, supernumerary; A. B. Nicholson, H. J. Harris, E. A. Flowers, Geo. Bancroft, J. W. Harmon, J. A. Vance, H. R. Caldwell, J. H. Evans, R. A. Sibley, N. B. Young, W. B. Hines, J. M. Pugh, superannuates. V. V. Boone, superannuate, and J. S. Parker and J. M. Cowan, superannuerary, when their names were called, asked that they be given work for the ensuing year.

After various announcements, the Conference adjourned with the benediction by Bishop Hendrix.

SECOND DAY.

Religious service was conducted by Dr. W. L. C. Hunnicutt. After the reading and approval of the Minutes, the roll was called, and several brethren who were absent on the first day answered to their names.

A report from Whitworth College was then read and referred, a very favorable showing being made. The college has 96 boarders, and has enrolled up to date 158 pupils.

A memorial from the Brookhaven District Conference was presented, petitioning that the collection for education be prorated among our male colleges. Referred. A letter was then read from J. H. Evans, superannuate, expressing regret at his inability, on account of bodily affliction, to attend Conference, and extending kindly greeting.

Rev. H. M. Dubose was announced as a transfer from the Northwest Texas Conference.

C. M. Crossley and E. E. Langford were elected to deacon's orders, and advanced to the class of the third year. D. Scarborough was also advanced to the same class.

F. B. Ormond, James C. Ellis, and J. H. Foreman were continued on trial.

W. M. Williams, H. C. Brown, H. B. Trevilion, Thos. King, J. D. Ellis, W. W. Moore, T. J. Norsworthy, R. E. Rutledge and M. J. Miller were continued in the class of the third year.

C. F. Emery, P. Hardin, M. M. Black, E. T. Breland, and A. H. Shannon were advanced to the class of the fourth year.

John Alexander Moore and Henry Anderson Gatlin were elected to local deacon's orders. Rev. D. C. Farmer, who has been a local preacher in elder's orders in the Congregational Methodist Church, was received by the Conference into the fellowship of our church, and his orders recognized after his having vowed his acceptance of our rules and doctrines.

Harrison B. Vandenberg, Robt. H. Barr, H. G. Hawkins, and Jas. G. Commack were continued in the class of the fourth year.

Adolph T. Bell, Henry Van Hook, W. M. Sullivan, and Jas. T. Leggett were elected to elder's orders.

A motion was then passed requesting the college of Bishops to fix Thursday hereafter as the day for the opening of our Conference.

An interesting report from Port Gibson Female College was read by Miss W. L. Park, one of the lady principals. This excellent institution now has eleven officers and teachers, and an enrollment of eighty-five. Sixty-two are in the college department. Miss Park made a hit when she said: "We are conducting not a money-making, but a woman-making institution."

The examination of character and the hearing of reports was continued, and before adjournment most of the brethren had been passed upon.

The remissness of some of the undergraduates in the matter of reporting to their respective committees for examination elicited a good deal of discussion. Greater diligence in pursuing the course of study and promptness in reporting for examination were emphasized in nearly all the speeches. The Bishop also took occasion to stress the importance of studiousness and punctuality on the part of the younger brethren. He said: "Unless you get hold of the intelligence of a community, you make Christianity disrospectable;" and quoted Wesley's remark that "the preacher who has no taste for reading had better return to his trade."

One of the brethren having stated in making his report that he had secured a contribution from every member of his charge, Bishop Hendrix added a few strong words upon the necessity of reaching and using every man, woman, and child in the church. "We have a Niagara of power," he remarked, "that we can harness—a great unutilized power." This led the Bishop to touch upon the subject of missions, in which he is profoundly interested. The best way to get up a revival, he declares, is to preach on missions. Missionary zeal he calls the great driving wheel of the church.

The Conference adjourned with the benediction.

THIRD DAY.

After religious service conducted by Rev. W. B. Lewis, Minutes of previous session were read and approved.

The Committee on Bible Cause then brought in its report, which provided for the levying of an assessment of $1,000 for this cause the ensuing year. Same was unanimously adopted.

Next followed a stirring address by Rev. J. W. McLaurin, agent for the American Bible Society, on the necessity of rallying to the support of this noble institution whose aim is to put the Word of God in reach of every human being. Bishop Hendrix remarked, by way of supplement, that we could not turn a wheel in the foreign field without the aid of this society.

A motion was then introduced and passed providing for the purchase of the library of the lamented Dr. H. F. Johnson, whose widow is anxious that the same shall become the property of the Methodist Church. Rev. B. F. Jones was appointed a committee of one to raise the money needed for the said purpose. The books on theology are to be given to Millsaps College; those on science to our female colleges.

Rev. J. M. Morse and D. S. Harmon were elected delegates to the American Anti-Saloon League Conference to be held at Washington City, Dec. 8–10.

President J. W. Beeson, of East Mississippi Female College, next read a report in which a most remarkable showing was made for this institution. It has enrolled this session 207 pupils, 75 of these being boarders. Four thousand dollars has recently been expended in improvements, repairs, etc. Several new departments have been added, one of the most noteworthy advances being the lectures on practical physiology by Dr. Rosa Weiss.

The report from the directors of the Mississippi Methodist Orphanage was read by A. F. Watkins. Same was adopted. The success of the orphanage is now assured, and work on it has already begun.

Rev. John W. Foster, of the Louisiana Conference, was introduced to the Conference this morning.

At eleven o'clock A. M. Bishop Hendrix delivered a masterly address to the class who were admitted into full connection, namely: F. B. Ormond, C. M. Crossley, E. E. Langford, and D. Scarborough. The address was deeply spiritual, and followed the line of thought suggested by the questions in the Discipline. It was a feast of fat things, and created a profound impression. In advising the young men, among other things, he said: "May it never be your lot to be merely an echo! I am more concerned about the preacher than about the sermon. A sermon is not an end, but a means. The man who stakes everything upon the delivery of the sermon does not make full proof of his ministry. Preachers should be as living trees for the comforting and healing of the nations." Again, he asserted that it takes more grace to make a pastoral visit than to preach a sermon. Regarding perfection he said: "No man is perfect in love towards God who is not perfect in love towards man. Men judge of how much you are perfected in love by how much you love them."

After the Bishop's address Miss Addie V. Marshall, president of the W. F. M. Society, was introduced, and made a very interesting talk upon the subject so dear to her heart. She was followed by Miss Addie Purnell, who spoke some earnest words in behalf of the Woman's Parsonage and Home Mission Society. Both these excellent women plead for more earnest co-operation in these lines of work on the part of the preachers, and we feel sure they will receive it.

FOURTH DAY.

Conference met at the usual hour. Rev. T. L. Mellen led the devotional exercises. After attending to the Minutes of yesterday's session, a letter of greeting was read from Rev. J. M. Pugh, one of our superannuated preachers who was unable to attend Conference.

The Committee on Conference Relations then brought in its report, which was adopted. J. W. Sandell was put on the supernumerary list. Revs. A. B. Nicholson, H. J. Harris, E. A. Flowers, George Bancroft, J. W. Harmon, J. A. Vance, H. R. Caldwell, J. H. Evans, R. A. Sibley, N. B. Young, W. B. Hines, J. M. Pugh, P. Howard, R. S. Woodward, and D. G. W. Ellis were granted the superannuated relation.

Next followed the reading and adoption of the report of the Committee on the State of the Church, which stated that the receipts for Conference collections and on salaries of ministers are on the increase. The report deprecated the practice of employing professional evangelists in camp and protracted meetings to the discount of our regular pastors. It also deprecated the holding of tent meetings where our churches are sufficiently large to accommodate the congregations.

The Committee on Temperance in its report stressed the importance of keeping this subject prominently before the people, and of pushing the fight until the entire State is free from the saloon evil.

The secretary, Dr. Andrews, was instructed to send the fraternal greetings of the Conference to the brethren of the A. M. E. Church, who are in Conference session to-day (Saturday) at Raymond, Miss.

The report of the Board of Missions contained a resolution urging upon our preachers and people the duty of subscribing for and circulating our missionary periodicals. It was resolved also to take up our missionary collections during the first quarter of the Conference year, and to use every means to secure every dollar of their assessment. Another resolution adopted in connection with said report was to the effect that hereafter during camp and protracted meetings one day be observed as a day of fasting and prayer in the interest of missions, and for preaching on same, a collection also to be taken therefor.

It was tacitly agreed, after some discussion, to raise $1,000 during the year for the support of Dr. John Burruss Fearn, who has gone from our State as a medical missionary to China. Three hundred and forty-five dollars of this amount was pledged during the morning session.

The Church Extension Board reported that during the 14 years service of its organization 132 churches within the bounds of the Mississippi Conference have been aided to the amount of $12,000. The total amount collected for this cause this year is $1,651.50, being $23.05 in excess of last year's collection. Assessment for next year is $2,100. The church is to be congratulated that Mr. R. L. Bennett, of Yazoo City, Miss., has generously donated two beautiful lots for church purposes at Gulf Port, Miss.

The claims of the Indian Mission were then presented by Rev. Irvin Miller, and $49 in cash was quickly raised to help pay for 160 acres of land needed in carrying on this work.

An important resolution, introduced by Dr. W. L. C. Hunnicutt, was adopted, petitioning Gov. McLaurin and the Legislature of Mississippi to co-operate with one another in the passage of a bill providing for a juvenile reformatory in connection with the State Penitentiary, so as to prevent youthful offenders from being subjected to the same confinement and discipline with old and hardened criminals.

John C. Ellis and George W. Huff, who were not present the first day or two of the Conference session, having stood approved examinations, were admitted into full connection.

The report of the Committee on Publishing Interests congratulated the Nashville Advocate on the maintenance of its high standard, strongly commended the Bi-Monthly Review and our Sunday-school periodicals, and urged that the Review of Missions and the World for Christ be placed in every home. Following is an extract relating to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE: "Our Conference organ, under the wise and conservative management of Dr. Black, is meeting all the requirements of a first-class organ, and we earnestly and cordially recommend it to the patronage of the whole Conference as a vehicle through which the church can express her thought, advocate her enterprises, defend her policies, and uphold her faith The improvement in the appearance of the paper is gratifying, and its financial condition is much improved through the increase of its subscription list. If we can take but one religious paper, let it be the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE." The editor of the ADVOCATE then addressed the Conference in its behalf.

The Joint Board of Finance renewed the request made last year for the observing of the first Sunday in March as Veterans' Day, and for the prompt forwarding of collections to the treasurer.

The following assessments were announced for the ensuing year: For Conference claimants, $6,000; for Bishops, $1,300. There was raised this year for Bishops $1,408.35, there being a deficit of about $69. The amount collected the past year for Conference claimants was $1,561.32 below the assessment. Not a single district, it was stated, paid this assessment in full. The appropriations to the claimants, however, were paid in full.

During the course of the morning all of the preachers not previously called had their characters passed and made their reports.

The Conference business being so nearly finished, Bishop Hendrix announced that by having a short afternoon session, the Conference could be ready to adjourn sine die Sunday night, and a motion to that effect prevailed.

After sundry announcements, came adjournment.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Conference met at 3 P. M. Rev. H. W. Featherstun conducted the devotional exercises.

Next came the report of the Board of Education, which elicited some discussion, but was adopted without amendment. President Chambers then delivered a strong and earnest speech in behalf of Whitworth Female College.

The Sunday-school Board reported $482.26 as having been raised on Children's Day, $474.47 of this having been expended. It requested that hereafter all applications for aid be made to Rev. J. W. Brown, and that the collection (Children's Day) be forwarded promptly to Rev. H. P. Lewis, treasurer.

Rev. T. L. Mellen was elected to fill the vacancy created in the Examining Committee of the First Year by the death of Dr. West, and was relieved from service on the colportage board by the election of R. A. Breland.

The Committee on Sabbath Observance in its report spoke strongly against the use of Sunday trains, Sunday mails, etc., and plead for more united and earnest effort in guarding the sacredness of the Sabbath.

The statistical secretary announced the following items: Members this year, 37,686; infants baptized, 919; adults baptized, 1,007; Epworth Leagues, 45; League members, 1,532; Sunday-schools, 336; teachers, 1,956; scholars, 15,960; collected for foreign missions, $6,528.93; domestic missions, $2,517; church extension, $1,688.40; Bible society, $798.63; Bishops, $1,424.60; number of societies, 456; church-buildings, 405; value of same, $418,480; pastoral charges, 121; number of parsonages, 100; district parsonages, 4.

Hattiesburg and Jackson being put in nomination for the place of holding the next Conference, Jackson was selected.

Resolutions expressing thanks to the people of Port Gibson and to the ladies of the Port Gibson Female College for their noble hospitality, to the officials of the several railroads in Mississippi, to the Presbyterian pastor and his congregation, and to the members of the A. M. E. Church, for courtesies shown, were passed by a rising vote.

Conference then adjourned to meet in memorial service Sunday night.

SUNDAY'S SERVICES.

At 9 A. M., and continuing until nearly 11 o'clock, a love-feast was held, conducted by Rev. L. S. Jones. It was a precious service, and proved indeed a season of refreshing to nearly all who were present. It was a deeply affecting scene when just before the close the brethren, in response to a request by the leader, came forward and shook hands with half a dozen or more veteran members of the Conference who have grown gray in the service of the Master.

At 11 A. M. in the Methodist Church Bishop Hendrix preached a grand and soul-stirring sermon from the text: "The joy of the Lord is your strength." The Bishop was at his best, and in his lofty flights made his hearers forget themselves and their surroundings. Several times there was a perceptible tremor in his voice, and his eyes were suffused with tears. The house was densely packed. After the sermon came the ordination service. Revs. H. W. Van Hook, A. T. Bell, and W. M. Sullivan were ordained elders, and C. M. Crossley, E. E. Langford, J. A. Moore, H. N. Gatlin, and Geo. P. McKeown were ordained deacons.

Dr. C. G. Andrews' sermon at 3 P. M., based on Acts xx, 22–28, was stimulating, comforting, and powerful.

Sunday night, commencing at seven o'clock, a memorial service was held, four members of the Conference having died during the year. The memoir of Rev. N. M. Clarke was read by Rev. Irvin Miller, that of Dr. T. S. West by Dr. W. L. C. Hunnicutt. Rev. S. A. Keene read the memoir of Rev. D. Merchant, and Rev. I. W. Cooper read the memoir of Rev. Thos. Price. Appropriate remarks were afterwards made by a number of the brethren.

The sacrament of the Lord's Supper was then administered to a large number of communicants, and was followed by the reading of the appointments, the benediction, and final adjournment.

TRANSFERRED.—L. T. Cole, to the Louisville Conference.

At Port Gibson.

We reached Port Gibson in time for the opening of the Conference, and remained to the close. We were domiciled in the home of Dr. L. Anderson, to whom and to his charming family we are indebted for a most delightful week. We were fortunate in having as co-guests men so companionable as Bros. Hunnicutt, Mellen and Heidelberg. We also enjoyed the hospitalities of our friends, Dr. and Mrs. L. A. Smith, Bro. and Sister Gerdon, and Mrs. Meek. Being busy with publishing matters, we turned over the work of writing up the Conference proceedings entirely to Rev. M. M. Black. We shall spend the next few days at Ruston, and then hie back to our sanctum.

On the eighth of December, at the residence of the bride's parents, in Natchez, Miss., Rev. M. M. Black, of the Mississippi Conference, was married to Miss Mary Vaughan, the editor of the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE officiating. The bridal party will spend a fortnight in the Crescent City. May unalloyed felicity be their lot!

Mississippi Conference Notes.

Connectional brethren were conspicuous by their absence.

Every preacher thought he had the best home in Port Gibson.

The weather was beautiful and bracing, and, after the first day, all that could be desired.

The assessment for education has been increased $300 over last year. This is as it should be.

The attendance on the part of the citizens and the young ladies of the college was gratifying, and we trust was highly beneficial.

It was acknowledged by common consent to be the pleasantest and most harmonious session held for years. The absence of friction was remarkable.

This Conference was a record-breaker in the matter of early adjournment, and also as to its freedom from jars. Many declared it to be the most spiritual session it has ever been their privilege to attend.

Bishop Hendrix is a model presiding officer. He dispatches business briskly, but without undue haste. The adroitness with which he suppresses unprofitable debate is wonderful to see. Notwithstanding the early adjournment, no important matter was slighted.

The Methodist Church at Port Gibson has just undergone a thorough overhauling at a cost of $750, and is now one of the neatest and prettiest churches in the State. Bro. Hicks Ellis is in favor with his people, and has just closed a most successful year. It is proposed in the near future to carpet the church and put in a pipe organ. Port Gibson, though not a metropolis, entertained the Conference easily, and with princely hospitality.

Friday night was observed as the missionary anniversary, the house being packed with people. Secretary Drake read the annual report. Rev. T. B. Holloman followed in a short, but pungent speech on our duty to missions. Bishop Hendrix was the next speaker of the evening, and his address was strong, full of fire, highly instructive, and of thrilling interest. On no other subject does he wax so eloquent as in pleading for foreign missions. We wish we could publish the address in full. At its conclusion a collection was taken amounting to over $100.

The preaching each night was strong and spiritual. Tuesday night Rev. R. W. Bailey delivered a very edifying discourse on Elijah. Wednesday night Rev. J. T. Nicholsen preached an eloquent sermon on the text, "Lovest thou me?" Rev. H. W. Featherstun's sermon, the next night, on "The Enduement of Power," produced a profound impression. Everybody was highly pleased with Rev. H. E. Partridge's sermon, Saturday night, on Rev. iii, 4. The following brethren preached Sunday: At the A. M. E. Church, 11 A. M., M. L. Burton; 3 P. M., M. H. Moore; 7:30 P. M., J. M. Morse. At the Presbyterian Church, 11 A. M., the editor of the ADVOCATE. At the Methodist Church, 3 P. M., Rev. C. G. Andrews.

In the Living Present.

Robert L. Garner, the French scientist, who reported that he discovered existence of "monkey-speech," and had mastered the same, is now declared an imposter by his own countrymen. He claimed that for many weeks he had lived in an iron cage, located in the recesses of the primeval forests of Africa Monkeys had been near him all the time. He subsequently published a book. Now it is said that he had not lived in an iron cage, but lazily at a Catholic mission station. Also that his book contains geographical incorrections. In short, the gullible public had been swindled.

A prominent Presbyterian minister, an ex-moderator, declares in Mid-Continent that never before was there so much ecclesiastical restlessness as at present. Nearly all the churches are seeking new pastors; and nearly all the pasters seeking new congregations. We pity them. Better adopt the Methodist itinerancy.

William Bayard Hale gives in The Forum "Another Year of Church Entertainments." All denominations have at times "wore the livery of heaven to serve the devil in." We mention only a few of the church entertainments: "Progressive Whist Party." Representation of "The Man Who Tickled His Wife to Death." Others applauded while attending "A Comedy of Errors up To-Date." Next: "Dance of Wood Nymphs." "Dude Drill." "Athletic Exhibition." "Dance of Arab Maidens." "Living Pictures Show," etc. The article enumerates about a thousand similar deviltries. In nearly all cases the object was to make money for the church. Sad.

An exchange reports the receipt of fifty dollars for which to send twenty-five copies of that paper to as many indigent families. The editor to choose the needy families. Indeed, a sensible benefaction! Said families will appreciate the paper, since, presumably, it is the only one they receive. There will be edification, information. All will be better church members. Fifty-two times the paper will bring sunshine to said desolate homes. As many times the inmates of those homes will call the donor blessed.

General Miles, in his annual report, recommends an increase of our army. There should be at least one soldier to every two thousand inhabitants. This should not be deemed a menace to the laboring classes. We needed them for the suppression of lawlessness. He also recommends new coast defenses. At present any war vessel of a hostile power could without hindrance bombard any of our seaports. Nearly all our heavy artillery is antiquated. Need modern large cannon. The General is right. In times of peace prepare for war.

The Manitoba school question, which has agitated the public for several years, has at last been settled. The public schools remain intact, the ordinary branches of education taught without religious bias. But if twenty-five parents or guardians of so many pupils desire it, the last half hour of school-time is to be devoted to religious instruction. Said instructor a priest. We presume Protestant pupils are not compelled to attend the Roman Catholic instruction. Though instruction is to be given in English, the French language is also to be taught.

The Christian Advocate (Nashville) has a timely article on "Mockery at Funerals." Profusion of flowers, but not even a floweret when alive. If the praise bestowed on the dead had been given them when alive, it would have made them inexpressibly happy. It is only at death that we hear of the great excellencies of the departed. At the funeral a dead mother is declared to have been the ideal of perfection, who in life was accosted only as the "old woman." Some mourners should mourn their conduct to the departed when associated with them. ICH DIEN.

Aching Joints

Announce the presence of rheumatism, which causes untold suffering. Rheumatism is due to lactic acid in the blood. It can not be cured by liniments or other outward applications. Hood's Sarsaparilla purifies the blood, removes the cause of rheumatism, and permanently cures this disease. This is the testimony of thousands of people who once suffered the pains of rheumatism, but who have actually been cured by taking Hood's Sarsaparilla. Its great power to act upon the blood and remove every impurity is the secret of the wonderful cures by Hood's Sarsaparilla.

HOME CIRCLE.

"NOW I LAY ME DOWN TO SLEEP"

BY EUGENE FIELD.

The fire upon the hearth is low,
And there is stillness everywhere;
Like troubled spirits, here and there
The fire light shadows flutter go:
And as the shadows round me creep,
A childish treble breaks the gloom,
And, softly, from a farther room
Comes, "Now I lay me down to sleep."

And, somehow, with that little prayer
And that sweet treble in my ears,
My thought goes back to distant years
And fingers with a dear one there;
And, as I hear the child's amen,
My mother's faith comes back to me,
Crouched at her side I seem to be,
And mother holds my hands again:

O for an hour in that dear place!
O for the peace of that dear time!
O for that childish trust sublime!
O for a glimpse of mother's face!
Yet, as the shadows round me creep,
I do not seem to be alone—
Sweet magic of that treble tone—
And "now I lay me down to sleep."

Be Patient with the Old.

"Why should that old lady care," I heard a girl say the other day, "whether or not her hair is turning gray? What possible difference can it make of what color is the hair of an old, old woman? Why, she must be almost eighty!"

In the case in question, the lady criticised was on the borderland of seventy, but to sixteen she might as well have been a hundred. Age and youth are relative. To the very young, years count for more than they do to the older, who have lived longer, and have learned that the soul does not grow old with the body. I myself feel pity for elderly people who are ashamed of their age, and are so weak as to try to hide it, but I don't quite like to see young girls unsympathetic. Try, if you can, to fancy yourselves in the position of some of your elders—of women who remember, but do not look forward. As you go tripping on, with light steps, imagine what it would be to totter a little, to see dimly, to hear faintly, to feel worried at every little pain and mishap, to reach the days when "the grasshopper is a burden."

All this should make you very patient and gentle with old people. There is nothing more beautiful in this world than to observe the tenderness of some girls toward their aged relatives. Dear grandmother can not thread her needles so easily as she used to do, and is sensitive on the subject; and does not like to be too obviously helped, to have attention called to her failing eyesight, which she so much regrets and does not like to admit. There are two ways of meeting the difficulty. Mattie, a kind-hearted girl without much tact, will exclaim: "Oh, gran'! what perfect nonsense for you to fuss over that needle! You know you can not find the hole where the thread should go in; your eyes are too old. Give me the thing; I'll thread your needles!" The intention is most excellent, but the old lady is hurt and stifles a sigh. She had young eyes once, and she has the same independent spirit still. Edith, in the same circumstances, manages in another fashion. She simply threads a dozen needles, and leaves them all ready for grandmama in her needle-book, saying pleasantly, "It saves so much time, dear, in these busy days, to have one's needles all ready and waiting."—Harper's Round Table.

The Secret of Being Popular.

Gwendoline writes that she wishes to know the secret of being popular. "I'd like to be a popular girl," she says, "a girl beloved by everybody." This is a natural wish, and in itself not wrong. There is a temptation to wrong in it if the desire be carried so far that, in order to become popular, the girl sacrifices valuable qualities of character, as, for instance, independence of judgment and sincerity. But there is no need of this. The girl who chooses to be popular needs first to be unselfish. She must not consider her own ends first nor chiefly. The atmosphere enfolding her must be that of love and kindness. You know how some girls always try to have the best things, the best places, the pleasant things, while they do not try to pass the good times along to others. These are not popular girls. Nobody can be fond of a selfish person. Again, a really popular person must have courage. Courage enough to be a leader. There are only a few leaders in any city, or school, or other corner of the world. Most people are followers. I heard of a leader this morning. She went to a boarding-school a long way off from home. Among the teachers there was a little shy Miss Somebody whom the girls did not like. They made fun of her prim manner and queer tow-colored hair, and a sort of mincing walk the poor lady had, and they did not see that she was really a very learned woman who could teach them a great deal if they would attend to her. Maria Matilda observed the state of affairs, and decided that it was unjust, so she championed the little teacher. She sent flowers to her desk. She listened respectfully when Miss Diffidence was in the preceptor's chair. She began to be very fond of her, and discovered that Miss Diffidence was really a dear, only frightened out of her wits among a crowd of unfeeling girls. Before long Maria Matilda changed the whole situation, and, she being a born leader, the rest followed her willingly. I need not add that Maria Matilda is popular, very popular.—Exchange.

Put His Whole Heart into It.

Charles Dickens the younger, writing in the North American Review, says of his father: "Whatever he did he put his whole heart into, and did as well as ever he could. Whether it was for work or for play he was always in earnest. Painting the scenes for a toy theater, dancing Sir Roger de Coverley at a children's party, gravely learning the polka from his little daughters, for a similar entertainment, walking, riding, picnicking, amateur acting, public reading, or the every-day hard work of his literary life—it was all one to him. Whatever lay nearest to his hand at the moment had to be done thoroughly. Speaking through the mouth of David Copperfield, my father described his own way of life with perfect accuracy when he said: 'I never could have done what I have done without the habits of punctuality, order, and diligence, without the determination to concentrate myself on one object at a time, no matter how quickly its successor should come upon its heels. Heaven knows I write this in no spirit of self-laudation. My meaning simply is that whatever I have tried to do in life I have tried with all my heart to do well; that whatever I have devoted myself to I have devoted myself to completely; that in great aims and in small I have always been thoroughly in earnest. Never to put my hand to anything on which I could not throw my whole self, and never to effect depreciation of my work, whatever it was, I find now to have been my golden rules.'"

The Conquest of Silence.

Washington never made a speech. In the zenith of his fame he once attempted it, failed, and gave it up confused and abashed. In framing the Constitution of the United States the labor was almost wholly performed in committee of the whole, of which George Washington was day after day chairman, and he made but two speeches during the convention, of a few words each, something like one of Grant's speeches. The convention, however, acknowledged the master spirit, and historians affirm that had it not been for his personal popularity and the thirty words of his first speech, pronouncing it the best that could be united upon, the Constitution would have been rejected by the people. Thomas Jefferson never made a speech. He couldn't do it. Napoleon, whose executive ability is almost without a parallel, said that his greatest difficulty was finding men of deeds rather than words. When asked how he maintained his influence upon his superiors in age and experience when commander-in-chief of an army in Italy, he said, by reserve. The greatness of a man is not measured by the length of his speeches and their number.—Philadelphia Ledger.

The Rise of a Boy.

This boy goes to business, and at his business begins by simply doing the things he is told to do, and doing them in a common and ordinary way. If he stops here, he remains, all his life long, a drudge. But if he begins to see that business has a significance; that his life is not merely sweeping the store, not merely writing letters, not merely selling goods; if he begins to see the higher life involved in business; if he begins to see that business is a greater instrument of beneficence than what we call beneficence; that trade is clothing thousands of men where charity clothes ten; that agricultural and milling industries are feeding thousands of men where charity feeds ten; if he begins to see how the whole history of the world is linked together, and is God's way of building up humanity and serving humanity—as he gets this large view and enters into it, life is enriched and becomes itself the minister whereby love is enlarged and conscience is strengthened, the school wherein he is educated out of the lower into the higher. He has now risen, or is rising, from that which is mortal into that which is immortal and eternal.—Dr. Lyman Abbott.

How and When Mrs. Burnett Writes.

From "A Chat with Frances Hodgson Burnett," in The Illustrated American, we extract the following, Mrs. Burnett speaking: "What is my method of writing? I am not sure that I have a method. When I am in the humor I write very fast and easily. When I am not in the humor I have nothing to say. I have sometimes amused myself by saying that it was not really I who wrote, but something weird and interesting which possessed me. Spooks, you know. The only habit I have which approaches a rule is that I always work in the morning. I seem more alive then than at any other time. When I have a story on hand I work upon it with a kind of regularity. Four stories in my life, however, have taken possession of me and insisted on being written, so to speak. One was a 'Story of the Latin Quarter,' published in the old Scribner's (now The Century) years ago. The leading thought was suggested to my mind by a poem I read one evening. I read it at the house of a friend, and the story which grew out of it immediately so filled me and overwhelmed me that I could not detach myself from it, and I have no doubt that my friend thought I was ill or partially demented, I was so abstracted. I wrote the story the next day. I felt it very intensely. It seemed almost too much to bear at the time. The closing words are: 'For that which Life had denied her, Death had given!' and I remember that when they came into my mind I broke down into an anguished fit of crying."

A Mistake Young People Make.

The great difficulty with the young men of the present day—as well, for that matter, as the young women—is the fact that they insist upon beginning where their mothers and fathers left off, and, as a natural consequence, very frequently end where their fathers and mothers began. Some one has pertinently said that in this country there are only three generations from shirt-sleeve to shirt-sleeve; that is to say, the grandfather begins life in his shirt-sleeves as a day-laborer, accumulates, becomes wealthy, passes on his wealth to his sons, who enjoy it and spend it, and their sons, dissipating it even more rapidly than themselves, end as day-laborers where their grandfathers began.—St. Louis Christian Advocate.

Among the specimens from the coal mines in a museum you will find slabs upon which the tiniest fronds of ferns, that grew nobody knows how many millenniums since, are preserved forever. Our lives, when the blow of the last hammer lays them open, will, in like manner, bear the impress of the minutest filament of every deed that we have ever done.—Maclaren.

Give Your Body, Nerves and Mind Sufficient Rest.

Many people wear themselves out needlessly; their conscience is a tyrant. An exaggerated sense of duty leads many a person to anxious, ceaseless activity, to be constantly doing something, never to be idle a second of time, to scorn to rest. Such people are in an unconscious nerve tension. They say they have no time to rest, they have so much to do, not thinking they are rapidly unfitting themselves for probably what would have been their best and greatest work in after years.

As there are conscious and unconscious thoughts, there are conscious and unconscious nerve tensions.

Self-control of nerve force is the great lesson of health, and, therefore, of life itself. To understand how to relax is to understand how to strengthen nerves. Hearty laughter is a source of relaxation, as are also all high thoughts, as those of hope, beauty, trust, or love. Relaxation is found in diversion. An occasional Summer outing or holiday is necessary.

In the early history of the United States, before stage routes were established west of the Atlantic coast, it was found that those foreigners who migrated westward through the mountains of Tennessee and North Carolina and marched only six days in the week, resting on the seventh day, covered more ground in a month than did those who marched every day during the month.

It is sufficient rest of body and mind which enables a man to accomplish his best work by relieving his nerve tension.—N. Y. Ledger.

Water for Health.

As one of the most valuable of the solvents, water enters into the blood and other liquids, making the entire round of the system in a very brief period, coming into contact and dissolving the effete matters which are thrown off by the decaying parts of the body as useless and putrescent effal, to be thrown off by perspiration and by the general excretories, doing more in the matter of renovating the body than all of the "blood purifiers" ever produced. While there is a constant tendency toward the accumulation of irritating deposits, free drinking of water prevents an excess, proving a very important means for the preservation of health. At no time is this more efficacious than when the stomach is empty, as early in the morning and at night, when there is generally an accumulation of mucus on the membrane, interfering with the oozing out of the gastric juice, the water, particularly if taken quite warm, a half hour before the meals, dissolving this and passing it into the bowels, materially improving the digestion of the following meals.—Phrenological Journal.

There are very few people, however sinful their lives, who do not cherish a vague hope that in some way they will go to heaven when they die. It does not occur to them that they might not be happy there.

"I have just been thinking," said a Christian traveler to a profane and half-drunken coach-driver, with whom he had been journeying. "I have just been thinking what you would do in heaven. There will be no coaches or horses or harness to swear at; no saloon to get drunk in; no stable companions to quarrel with—what will you do in heaven?"

The question was startling, well-timed and unexpected. It proved like a nail in a sure place, and, by the blessing of God, it brought him to repentance.—Selected.

This is eternal life; a life of everlasting love, showing itself in everlasting good works; and whosoever lives that life, he lives the life of God and hath eternal life.—Charles Kingsley.

Let us, while treating of religion, carefully keep ourselves in a sphere superior to prejudices and disputes, so as to speak of God, not with human passion, but divinely.

Whose neglects a thing that he suspects he ought to do because it seems too small a thing is deceiving himself. It is not too little, but too great for him.—E. B. Pusey.

Constipation

is a disease which afflicts over 75 per cent. of the American people. It is a dangerous disease because it not only poisons the blood but causes heaviness, oppression, and dulls the intellect. Then follow chronic headache, loss of appetite, slow digestion, nervousness, bad breath, dingy complexion and low spirits. It will eventually bring on liver and kidney disease in some incurable form. But sufferers from this dreaded malady are speedily

Cured by

Warner's SAFE Cure and Warner's SAFE Pills. Leading physicians the world over, have acknowledged this fact, and thousands of people throughout the land have testified to it.

Warner's

SAFE Cure puts a stop to backaches, headaches, constipation, loss of appetite, dyspepsia, tired feelings and sleeplessness. It builds up the exhausted system. It is a sure cure for liver and kidney complaint in any form, and the only remedy that has ever been able to cure Bright's disease.

If you are feeling the need of such a remedy, you cannot do better than try this king of remedies, the great

OBITUARIES.

WILLIAMS—Mrs. Frances A. Williams, wife of Rev. J. L. Williams, and daughter of Franklin and Elizabeth Taylor, was born in Alabama, Dec. 23, 1833. She joined the M. E. Church, South, in 1842 or 1843, the ninth or tenth year of her age. She was married to Mr. Thomas P. Reynold in 1828, who died in 1851, leaving her with three children. During 1861 she was married to Bro. Williams, by whom she had two children, one of whom, a son, died just as he was reaching manhood; the other, a daughter, lives to share the bereavement of her loss with her father.

Sister Williams died Nov. 14, 1896, at about six o'clock, after much suffering for many years. Notwithstanding this continued suffering, we were not expecting death just at the time, and it was a shock to all.

Hers was a holy and devoted life. She loved God and kept his commandments, and his commandments were not grievous unto her. She was a close student of God's Word, and profited by its preaching, and the study of it both mentally and spiritually. She was an exemplary Christian, and happy during all of her protracted suffering. Her afflictions seemed to work within her patience, etc. I was with her often during last year and this, and found her ever submissive to the Master's will. She was cheerful and uncomplaining, and thought of others' convenience and comfort. She was a faithful and devoted wife, truly filling the relation of helpmeet for him, sharing his privation, helpful in labors, comforting in trouble, and rejoicing in his success. She was a loving and painstaking mother, having a holy influence over the children. They all are religious, both hers and her husband's (he had five before they were married), and doubtless her influence and training had much to do with it.

She was truly a help to her pastor. My visits were a pleasure to her and blessing to me.

Robert Randle.

Summerfield, La.

WILLETTE—Mrs. J. K. Willette (nee Mollie White), after serving her own generation according to the will of God, fell on sleep in Christ, Nov. 9, 1896. She was born in Sumpter county, Ga., Sept. 17, 1857; came to Louisiana with her parents in 1858. She was converted in early childhood, before she was eight years of age, and joined the M. E. Church, and was during her entire pilgrimage one of Christ's most devout followers. Her unwavering fidelity to her church and great love for her Savior's cause entitled her to a place of honor and trust in the church militant, and through faith in his name received a happy transfer to the church triumphant.

She was one of those elect women upon whom the Lord and his church could depend. The church and its interest was first with her. The ministry found a ready, willing and wise helper in her, and the comforts of her pastors were carefully and lovingly provided. No more faithful woman has lived among us than she, but God took her, and we miss her, and the church has lost one of its best friends; but with submission to the divine will we bow, and with strong confidence we expect to meet again, for she knew that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens.

Her suffering was of eight weeks' duration, but deliverance came, and just before the last hour of her earthly stay she assembled the family and friends around her bed, and talked of going home with great composure and unearthly joy, eliciting many promises from loved ones and friends to be faithful and meet her in the eternal city above. She gave instruction concerning some unfinished church work, and insisted on its completion. Instructions concerning her remains were also given, and they were carefully laid away to await the resurrection of the just. "Our people do well." We pray that the God of all grace will sustain the bereft.

Jno. A. Miller.

FOWLER—Sister Sarah M. Fowler was the daughter of J. W. and Susan Fowler; was born in Talladega, Ala., June 4, 1860. Her parents moved to Louisiana in 1871; settled near Labou, where they remained three years. They finally settled near Ilico, where they (or her mother, the father being dead, still) remain.

Sister Sarah died Nov. 4, 1896. She was a great sufferer during the last fifteen years of being afflicted with severe neuralgia or sick headache, at times causing prostration for weeks. The attacks would come every two or three months.

Sister Sarah was a devoted Christian and a loving, faithful daughter and sister. She joined the M. E. Church, South, in her sixteenth year, and was ever a consistent and earnest Christian.

May God's tenderest love comfort the aged mother and brothers and sisters!

HENRY—Bro. Thomas N. Henry was born in Perry county, Ala., April 23, 1843. His parents moved to this State in 1849, and settled in Union parish. He joined the M. E. Church, South, in 1867. He was married to Miss Alice D. Tatum in 1872, and settled in Claiborne parish near Ilico, where he died June 14, 1893.

Bro. Henry was a good man. While not demonstrative, he was consistent. I was with him several times during his last illness, which lasted over five months. He was ever patient, and expressed himself as trusting God through Christ, and ready to go. His wife says that he was often happy during his last days. He has been useful in the community.

He leaves a wife and five children, who have our prayers and sympathy. May God's presence comfort and guide them!

LUM—Gadi Ervin Lum, son of Wm. J. and Lucretia M. Lum, was born Dec. 11, 1848, and died at his home near Rocky Springs, Claiborne county, Miss., on Friday, Oct 30, 1896. He was happily married Dec. 18, 1873, by Rev. H. R Singleton, to Miss Laura Lane McCoy. God graciously blessed this union with five bright, promising children, three of whom, with the sorrowing wife, still live to mourn his loss.

Bro. Lum joined the M. E. Church, South, under the pastorate of Bro. Singleton, at Rocky Springs, in 1872, and for several years previous to his death lived a consistent Christian life. He was a true friend to the weary itinerant, making him comfortable and happy in his home, and was solicitous for his support and success as a preacher. He contributed liberally of his means to the support of the church, and for several years previous to his death made a true, faithful steward. He was true and faithful as a friend, honorable and upright as a man, tender and loving as a father, kind and devoted as a husband. Being true to every trust committed to him through life, he enjoyed a widespread influence, and was respected, honored and loved by all who knew him. To know him was to love him.

Bro. Lum was recognized as a wise man, a stannch citizen, and a pillar in the church of God. He filled faithfully and efficiently, for a good many years, several important public offices in this, his native county. He was a trusted and true member of Claiborne Masonic Lodge No. 110 for the past twenty-seven years.

A good, true and valuable man has been taken from our midst, and we miss him sorely. The whole community has been saddened on account of his death. He was not confined to his bed long, but for several weeks previous to his death he suffered from loss of appetite, nausea, rigors, difficulty in breathing, and pain in the region of the heart. All was done that tender hands and loving hearts could do to relieve his suffering and conquer the disease, but, after hours of struggle for breath and battle for life, cold, cruel death claimed him as its victim.

Bro. Lum is no more. He rests in peace awaiting the resurrection morn. His life and last words give comfort to sorrowing hearts and bespeak for him a bright immortality. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord."

God's thoughts are very deep, and his ways past finding out. We can not understand this dispensation of Providence; but God is our Father, we are his children, and whatever he does is best. So we bow in submission, kiss the rod of affliction, and say, "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord!"

May God comfort the hearts of the grief-stricken family, and bring them at last, an unbroken family, to the land of everlasting life!

OLIVER—Mrs. Dr. C. C. Oliver (nee Jessie A. Allen), second daughter of W. A. and Sallie A. Allen, departed this life Nov. 10, 1896, at the residence of W. F. Ashly, in Ruston, La. She was born in Wetumpka, Ala., October, 1851. She joined the M. E. Church, South, and was a consistent member to the end of her journey. She was a great sufferer, but relief has come, and sickness and sorrow can not enter the home to which she has gone, believing that these light afflictions that are but for a moment worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory, while we look not at the things that are seen, for they are temporal, but at the things that are not seen, for they are eternal; praying that the Lord may bless to our good our loss in the loved one and friend.

Jno. A. Millar.

Ruston, La.

JOHNSON—B. F. Johnson was born in South Carolina, March 16, 1819. He was married to Miss Mary Ann Rowland, Dec. 7, 1848. He moved to Mississippi one year after marriage, and died at his home in Pascola county, Miss., Aug. 10, 1896. He joined the Methodist Church, South, in 1851, and lived a consistent member of the same—so say his friends and brethren—till the day of his death. His last sickness was long and lingering, but he bore his suffering with Christian fortitude. He left a wife and many friends to mourn his death.

You say that the desert is a desert because no rain falls upon it; but that is only half the truth. No rain falls upon it because it is a desert. The heated air rushing up from the arid surface disperses the vapors that would descend in rain. Some moisture there must be on earth, else there can not be rain from heaven. So in your heart this forgiving disposition must be, else you can not rejoice in the fullness of God's forgiving grace.—Washington Gladden.

Something Good in Dixie

Please understand I am a woman of Indiana, not of Dixie, but do appreciate this good delight to acknowledge it that all persons afflicted as I have been may know there is hope and happiness for them. I had been a stammerer from childhood; sometimes as unable to speak as though dumb. Had tried several cures, but all of them failed. Then, as a last resort, I tried Rev. H. W. Randolph's Cure for Stuttering or Stammering, and now am CURED. Four days after complying with the requirements of the Cure, I received by mail that which enabled me to talk with such ease and infinite satisfaction, which, to one who endures in a silent state so long and severely as I have is a "veritable gladness in the soul." I have never seen Rev. Randolph, but have found him to be a man of his word, and is highly recommended in our highest circles, also by state officials. His Voice School, or Institute, is located at No. 463 Poplar Street, Memphis, Tenn., and in accordance with this school a cure is GUARANTEED. The Cure by mail gives the same happy results, if instructions are carefully followed, which ever children can do, and those needing the benefit of this GOOD will find him so considerate in his terms they need not suffer these afflictions longer. Submitted for the sake of the unfortunate.

Contains the Following Helps to the Study of the Bible.

Concordance, with Contexts, over 40,000 References; Index to Persons, Places and Subjects, 16,000 References; Scripture Atlas, with Index; Glossary of Bible Words; Bible Calendar; Summary and Analyses of the Old and New Testaments.

A Self-Pronouncing Dictionary of Proper Names and Foreign Words contained in the Bible, comprising about 3,500 words, giving the pronunciation, the meaning, and the location of the text where the word occurs for the first time.

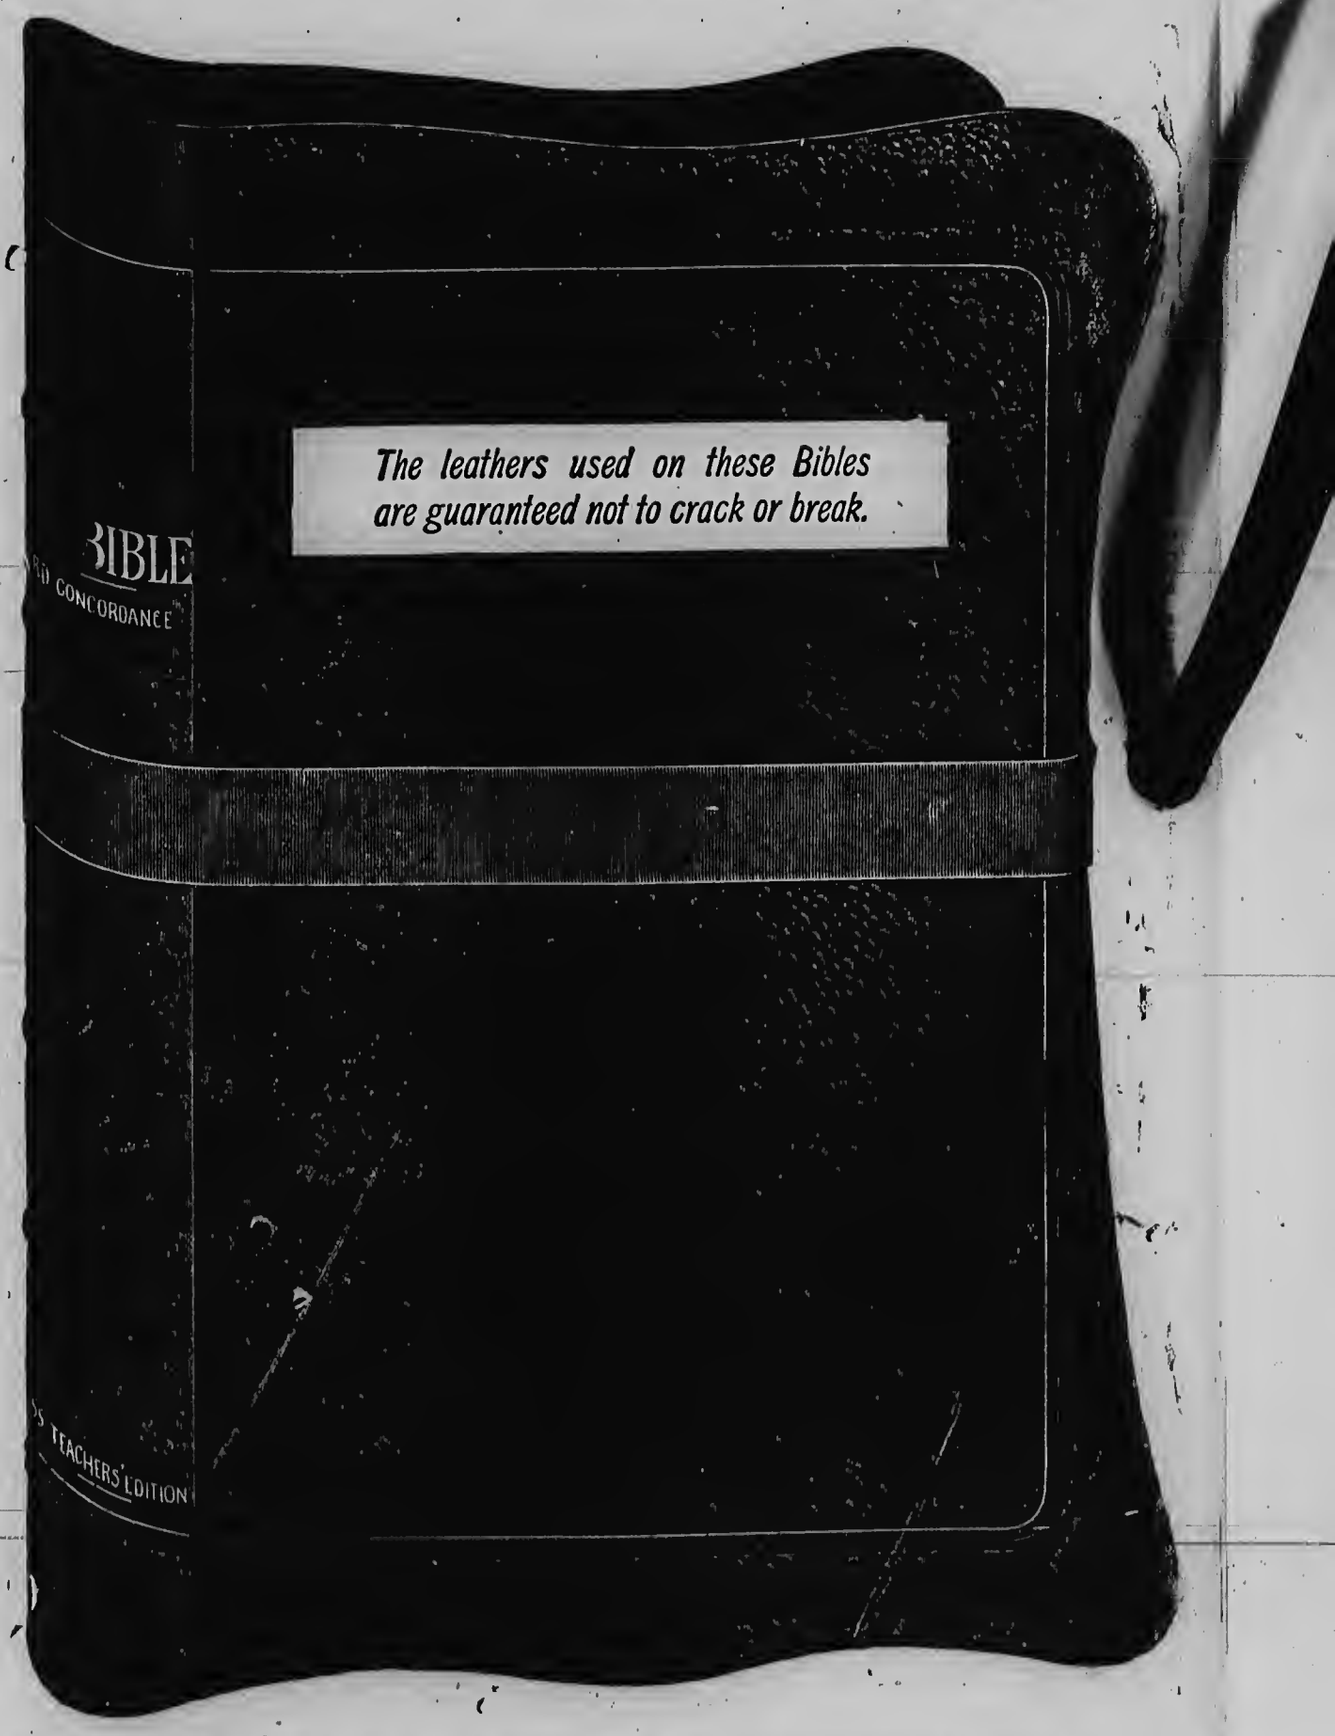
Exhaustive Articles on Biblical History, Geography, Topography, Natural History, Ethnology, Botany, Chronology, Music and Poetry; a Complete Harmony of the Gospels, Tables of Parables, Miracles, Prophecies, Prayers, Money, Weights and Measures, Jewish Sects and Orders, etc.

TWELVE FULL-PAGE MAPS IN COLORS.

Every proper name in the text is syllabified and accented, and has the vowels marked according to the most authoritative modern standards of pronunciation. The text is in exact conformity with that of the world-famous Oxford S. S. Teacher's Bible. All the valuable "Helps to the Study of the Bible" contained in the Oxford Bible are retained.

The only Teacher's Bible with a self-pronouncing text. No similar Bible was ever obtainable heretofore; in fact, no publishers ever attempted its publication.

"The essence of fifty expensive volumes, by men of sacred learning, is condensed in these 'Helps.'"



The large-type (Bourgeois) edition sells to persons who are not subscribers for $5. Our subscribers get it, on conditions specified below, for $2.35. The same Bible in Minion type, which is somewhat smaller than Bourgeois, we offer to our subscribers, on conditions named below, for $1.55. To those who are not subscribers we sell it at $3.15. We also handle an edition in still smaller type (Emerald). Our subscribers get this for $1.15.

In order to get anyone of these at these rates it is necessary to pay your subscription one year in advance, viz., to December, '97. (A little later it will be January '98.)

For twenty cents we will have your name engraved in gilt letters on the outside of the book.

Colored physicians of South Carolina have formed a State organization.

A Pennsylvania court has decided that to call a man a mugwump is not a libel, but a compliment.

Sixty-four thousand tons of sugar beets were grown in two counties of Southern California this year.

The Salvation Army will shortly organize a movement among the colored folks of the South. Headqnarters are to be established in Atlanta.

The Supreme Court of North Carolina has rendered a decision holding that a private citizen impersonating an ordained minister who solemnizes a marriage between a man and woman is guilty of no crime either at common or statute law.

The Associated Charities of Chicago, through its secretary, has notified the public that 8,000 families, including 35,000 persons, are now destitute in Chicago. This is the result of a canvass that covered only half of the city. The total destitution will approximate 15,000 families, or 70,000 persons, mostly foreigners.

The Special Judiciary Committee of the Georgia House of Representatives has agreed upon a favorable report on a bill to allow women to hold the office of State Librarian. The bill is the first step towards making women eligible to hold all offices not elective by the people of the General Assembly. It is in line with another bill which is now pending before the House Committee.

On Dec. 7 the Union National Bank, of this city, one of the institutions which suspended during the financial flurry of three months ago, again opened its doors for business, its shareholders and management having successfully overcome and straightened out the difficulties which overtook the institution and compelled its temporary suspension.

In his message to Congress, which was sent in at its opening on Dec. 7, President Cleveland deals with the Cuban question in a careful way, saying the time has not yet come for the United States to take a hand in the present war. Should Spain not soon win some decided victories, or continue the present war of extermination, this government, in the interest of humanity, must intervene with an armed hand, if necessary.

A meeting of representatives interested in the commerce of the Mississippi Valley is to be held at Washington, the national capital, on the seventeenth of the present month, to bring to the attention of Congress the urgent necessity for some prompt and efficient action for the closing of a crevasse in the Passa-l'Outre of the Mississippi river, by which the navigation of the sea gate to the great valley is seriously jeopardized.

Contributions for the memorial to be erected at Rugby in honor of the author of "Tom Brown's School Days" are coming in with surprising rapidity. Already £960 has been raised, and as the fund will evidently more than suffice to carry out the original purpose, it has been decided to use the excess over the cost of the statue in furthering the home mission work conducted at London and Birmingham by the present and former pupils of the famous school.

All who are engaged in the Sunday school work and also all ministers and general Bible students will be interested in the following announcement from the American Institute of Sacred Literature. It would seem as if all the lines of work suggested would help greatly to supplement and unify the lessons of the International System in 1897. During the entire year these lessons will be taken from the book of Acts. Opportunities, therefore, for the study of not only the book of Acts, but the Epistles and Revelation in their historical connection with it, can not fail to be welcome.

This scheme of supplementary work offered by the American Institute is sufficiently comprehensive to include all grades of students from the minister down to, but not including, the Primary Department.

Only the briefest outline may be given here, but beginning with the lowest grade the plan is as follows:

1. For all Sunday-school pupils and teachers—an examination in four grades. (1) The Elementary, for all under fifteen years of age; (2) The Intermediate, for all between the age of fifteen and twenty; (3) The Progressive, for adult Bible classes, and (4) the Advanced, for ministers and all who have made a critical study of the subject. The fee for examination will be 50 cents, and all students gaining an average of 70 per cent. will receive a certificate. There will be ten or twelve questions. Specimen questions and an examination direction sheet will be sent each candidate upon enrollment. All schools enrolling fifty candidates will be supplied with the series of reference books for their libraries which are named under 3.

2. For all Adult Bible classes—an outline course of study covering the Acts, the Epistles, and the Revelation in their historical connection. In this course the work for each day is definitely planned and assigned, and the work of Sunday may be a summary and review, or the class may be a week-day club holding weekly or fortnightly meetings for which special programs will be suggested. The cost of the work is 50 cents for each member of the class.

3. For Sunday-school teachers—a course of reading covering the biblical material, and in connection with it the historical background and homiletic material. The required books are as follows: (1) In the Time of Jesus (Seidel). (2) The Beginnings of Christianity (Fisher). (3) The Records and Letters of the Apostolic Age (Burton). (4) American Institute Essays in Biblical Literature—New Testament Series, Nos. 1–10. (5) The Biblical World, July, 1895–96.

The membership fee of fifty cents in this Reading Guild entitles the student to a monthly Postal Bulletin assigning the reading for each month and giving valuable suggestions and questions concerning it. The plan would solve the question of an interesting teachers' meeting in many cases. Where each teacher does not care to purchase all the books, a combination may be made.

4. For Sunday-school teachers who wish to do the most thorough work—a correspondence course. This will be conducted by a skilled instructor through fortnightly written recitations. The work will be as careful and detailed and the criticisms as definite as in a regular class-room. An effort will be made to acquaint the teacher with the facts in the history of the early church concerning (a) the organization of the church, (b) the environment of the church, (c) the development of the church, (d) the belief and teaching of the church, (e) the practice of the church, (f) God's providence sustaining and directing the church, (g) the records which have been preserved of the history of the church in this period. A tuition fee of $5 will be charged for this course.

5. For ministers and Bible students who wish to do critical work.—(1) A correspondence course in the English covering in a critical and exhaustive manner the Acts, Epistles, and Revelation (tuition, $5). (2) A correspondence course in the Acts in the original Greek. This course will be critical, exegetical, and will require as a prerequisite the ability to read Classical or New Testament Greek. A tuition fee of $8 will be charged for this course.

Full information concerning any of this work may be obtained by addressing The American Institute of Sacred Literature, Hyde Park, Chicago, Ill.

In Bath, Me., in order to secure a large attendance at one of the city's churches, it is announced in the daily papers that souvenirs will be distributed.

Eczema ON BABY

Grew Worse under Treatment of Best Physicians. Tried

CUTICURA REMEDIES

Great Change in Five Days and To-day is Entirely Cured.

My baby had Eczema in its worst form. One of the best physicians in the city attended her, but she continued to get worse all the time. He finally admitted he was at his wits' end. I then got CUTICURA REMEDIES, and in a few days noticed a great change in her condition. She continued to improve and to-day is entirely cured, has nice head of hair, and is lively and hearty. I spent considerable money for drugs and doctor's bills, which was useless. J. B. JACOBS, 2031 Wilkins Ave., Balt., Md.

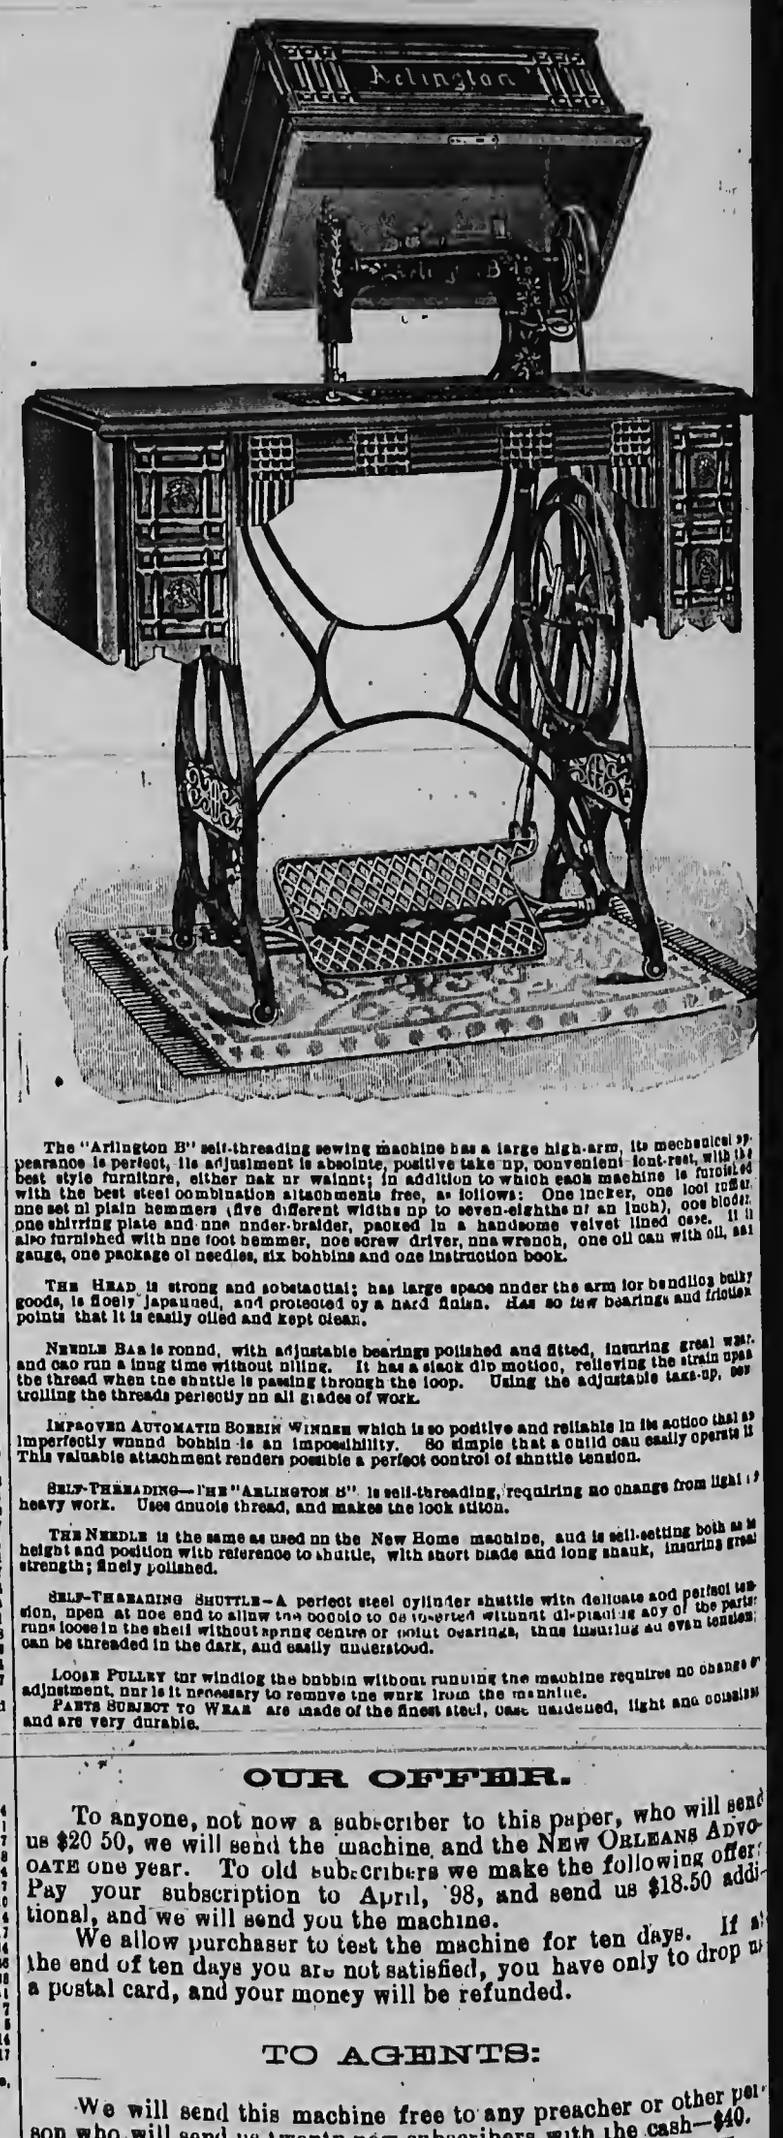
Sold throughout the world. Price, CUTICURA, 50c.; SOAP, 25c.; RESOLVENT, 50c. and $1. POTTER DRUG AND CHEM. CORP., Sole Props., Boston.

"How to Cure Every Skin Humor," mailed free.

Our Machine Offer.

New Improved High-Arm "Arlington B" Self-Threading Sewing Machine.

A recorded certificate of warranty for 10 years accompanies each machine. The "Arlington B" is complete in every detail, combining all modern and late improvements, such as automatic bobbin winder, self-threading shuttle, self-setting needle, upper spring tension, etc.



The "Arlington B" self-threading sewing machine has a large high-arm, its mechanical appearance is perfect, its adjustment is absolute, positive take up, convenient foot-rest, with the best style furniture, either oak or walnut; in addition to which each machine is furnished with the best steel combination attachments free, as follows: One ruffler, one foot ruffler, one set of plain hemmers (five different widths up to seven-eighths of an inch), one blinder, one shirring plate and one under-braider, packed in a handsome velvet lined case. It is also furnished with one foot hemmer, one screw driver, one wrench, one oil can with oil, seam gauge, one package of needles, six bobbins and one instruction book.

THE HEAD is strong and substantial; has large space under the arm for handling bulky goods, is finely japanned, and protected by a hard finish. Has so few bearings and friction points that it is easily oiled and kept clean.

NEEDLE BAR is round, with adjustable bearings polished and fitted, insuring great wear, and can run a long time without oiling. It has a slack dip motion, relieving the strain upon the thread when the shuttle is passing through the loop. Using the adjustable take-up, controlling the threads perfectly on all grades of work.

IMPROVED AUTOMATIC BOBBIN WINDER which is so positive and reliable in its action that an imperfectly wound bobbin is an impossibility. So simple that a child can easily operate it. This valuable attachment renders possible a perfect control of shuttle tension.

SELF-THREADING—THE "ARLINGTON B" is self-threading, requiring no change from light to heavy work. Uses double thread, and makes the lock stitch.

THE NEEDLE is the same as used on the New Home machine, and is self-setting both as to height and position with reference to shuttle, with short blade and long shank, insuring great strength; finely polished.

SELF-THREADING SHUTTLE—A perfect steel cylinder shuttle with delicate and perfect tension, open at one end to allow the bobbin to be inserted without disturbing any of the parts; runs loose in the shell without spring centre or point bearings, thus insuring an even tension; can be threaded in the dark, and easily understood.

LOOSE PULLEY for winding the bobbin without running the machine requires no change of adjustment, nor is it necessary to remove the work from the machine.

PARTS SUBJECT TO WEAR are made of the finest steel, case hardened, light and compact, and are very durable.

OUR OFFER.

To anyone, not now a subscriber to this paper, who will send us $20 50, we will send the machine, and the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE one year. To old subscribers we make the following offer: Pay your subscription to April, '98, and send us $18.50 additional, and we will send you the machine.

We allow purchaser to test the machine for ten days. If at the end of ten days you are not satisfied, you have only to drop us a postal card, and your money will be refunded.

TO AGENTS:

We will send this machine free to any preacher or other person who will send us twenty new subscribers with the cash—$40.

The devotional exercises were led by B. F. Phillips. The Minutes of yesterday's session were read and approved.

The Committee on Conference Relations presented Report No. 1, which was adopted.

The committee in the case of D. C. Foust presented the following report:

We, your committee to try the case of Rev. D. C. Foust, find that the charge and specifications are not sustained by testimony produced, and we, therefore, declare the accused acquitted. AMOS KENDALL, Chairman.

T. B. CLIFFORD, Sec.

The following resolution, signed by Amos Kendall, H. R. Tucker and R. A. Burroughs, was adopted:

Recognizing the fact that it is our duty, both as a church and as a Conference, to observe the national Thanksgiving Day, and that day generally being one of the days of our annual session, which necessitates the absence of the pastors from their several charges, thus depriving many of our congregations of the privilege of public religious worship in accordance with the President's proclamation; therefore, be it

Resolved, That our Bishops be and are hereby requested, if consistent with their onerous duties, to make the time of our Conference a few days sooner, or a little later, whichever shall suit them best.

The Bishop called Question 1, "Who are admitted on trial?" J. Aaron Braswell, Grenada district; James E. Cunningham, Aberdeen district; Randolph A. Tucker, Corinth district, and Robert E. Duke, Holly Springs district, having been recommended by their respective District Conferences, and having passed a satisfactory examination on the prescribed studies, were admitted on trial.

Question 5, "Who are readmitted?" N. G. Augustus, having been recommended by the Columbus District Conference, was readmitted into the traveling connection in elder's orders.

The committee of trial in the case of J. Wm. Bell presented the following report:

We, the committee in the case of J. Wm. Bell, after giving the case careful investigation, do find the charge and specifications sustained, and we hereby pronounce him expelled from the ministry and membership of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South: JOHN W. BELL, Chair'n.

R. M. EVANS, Sec.

Dr. J. H. Kirkland, chancellor of Vanderbilt University, was introduced by the Bishop, and addressed the Conference in the interests of the great cause of Christian education. Dr. Kirkland asked the Conference to concur in a resolution looking to a change in the basis of representation in the Board of Trust of Vanderbilt University. The Conference concurred. He also stated that the Board of Trust had elected Hon. Newnan Cayce to take the place of Judge James T. Fant, deceased, and asked the Conference to confirm the appointment.

Dr. R. W. Jones offered the following resolution in reference to the visit of Chancellor Kirkland, which was adopted:

Resolved, That we appreciate the visit and address of Chancellor Kirkland, of Vanderbilt University, and hereby give him a cordial invitation to attend the future sessions of this Conference.

Rev. R. V. Taylor, of the Memphis Conference, was introduced by the Bishop.

Question 4, "Who are admitted into full connection?" Byron P. Patterson, John R. Countiss, having passed in examination of character and prescribed studies, and after giving satisfactory answers to the questions propounded by the Bishop, were, by vote of the Conference, admitted into full connection.

Question 10, "What local preachers are elected deacons?" Gustavus A. Klein, having been for three years a local preacher, and one year on trial in the traveling connection, was elected to deacon's orders.

The Committee on Public Worship reported as follows: Methodist Church, 7:15 P. M., Epworth League meeting. Addresses by Hon. G. J. Leftwich, T. W. Lewis, Dr. S. A. Steel. The following resolutions was unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That inter-collegiate foot ball, as now so intensively played, and which is proving detrimental to the moral and intellectual training of our boys at college, we, the North Mississippi Conference, respectfully advise all schools under the supervision of our church to outlaw such games, and forbid their students to engage in them.

(Signed) AMOS KENDALL,
J. A BOWEN,
J. W TREADWELL.
J. S. OAKLEY,
J. W. BOSWELL.

Report No. 2 of the Committee on Conference Relations was adopted, furnishing an additional answer to Question 18, "Who are superannuated?" A. J. Jones. No provision having been made for Bro. Jones' support during the ensuing year, a collection of $85 was taken for this purpose.

The report of the Committee on District Conference Records was read and adopted.

Rev. T. W. Adams, of the Mississippi Conference, was introduced by the Bishop.

Reports of Committee on Sabbath Observance, Board of Church Extension, Joint Board of Finance, Committee on Temperance, Books and Periodicals, were read and adopted.

The report of the Committee on Bible Cause was read, and, after remarks by Rev. J. W. McLaurin, District Superintendent of the American Bible Society, was adopted.

On motion, the session was extended to 1:15. It was resolved that when we adjourn, we adjourn to meet at 2:30 P. M.

The following resolution in reference to the publication of the Conference Minutes was adopted:

Resolved, That Rev. J. S. Oakley, our secretary, is hereby appointed to edit and publish the Minutes of this session of the Conference.

H. C. MOREHEAD,
J. B. STONE,
J. W. PRICE,
T. C. WIER.

The Report of the Committee on Mississippi Orphans' Home was read and adopted.

The following resolutions were adopted by a rising vote:

Resolved, That we earnestly express to the people of Greenville our hearty and grateful appreciation of the generous and elegant hospitality with which they have entertained this Conference.

Resolved, That we thank the Episcopal, Baptist, Presbyterian and Christian Churches and pastors of this city for the use of their houses of worship and other courteous attentions.

Resolved, That we thank the railroad companies for reduced rates to the members of this Conference.

Resolved, That we extend thanks to the Greenville Democrat for publishing the proceedings of the Conference.

Resolved, That we thank Rev. T. Y. Ramsey for the careful arrangements and provisions for the accommodation of the Conference.

Resolved, That we cordially welcome our venerable friend and brother, W. C. Johnson, who was for a long time editor of the Western Methodist, and R. V. Taylor. We enjoyed their visit and pray the richest blessings of our Father upon them.

R. W. JONES,
J. H. MITCHELL,
J. W. LEWIS,
J. A. RANDOLPH.

Announcements were made, and Conference adjourned to meet at 2:30 P. M.

Benediction by Amos Kendall.

Reports of Boards and Committees.

Spiritual Interests of the Church.

Your committee beg leave to submit the following report:

We believe that the spiritual state of the church has steadily improved during the year, as well as in the years past. We note, as evidence of improvement, the loyalty to the polity of the church and fidelity to the cause of God which we find generally among our people.

Your committee are glad to report an increase in membership, as indicated by the reports of the several pastors. There have been many great revivals within our borders during the year, deepening the work of grace in the hearts of believers, and bringing many from darkness to the light of life, thus insuring the perpetuity of the church.

We note with great gratitude to our heavenly Father the growing activity of our young people, particularly our young men, in the work of the church as developed by the Epworth Leagues. We should see to it, therefore, that Leagues are organized in all our churches wherever practicable.

Our Sunday-schools have not increased in number, but have in average attendance, and we believe greatly in a knowledge of the real aim of the work—the salvation of the souls of the children. Many of our children are coming to a vital knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ through the instrumentality of the Sunday-school.

The support of the gospel and all the enterprises of the church are more liberal this year than ever before. The attendance on public worship and other means of grace is as good now as it has ever been.

We believe, further, that our preachers are emphasizing the fundamental doctrines of our holy Christianity, and honoring the Holy Ghost in their ministry, as fully as ever in the history of the church.

We are pleased to note an increase in the circulation of our church literature, which presages a more intelligent and faithful Christian life in the church to come than has been possible in the past.

The facilities for travel has made possible the great Epworth League rallies and other mass meetings that bring together the workers of every section, thus enkindling the fires of enthusiasm, and spreading the work of the Holy Spirit to the farthest parts of our Zion, uniting us into oneness of spirit and purpose.

We offer the following resolutions:

Resolved, That we encourage our people to attend these Epworth rallies and other gatherings of the church.

Resolved, That we stress the necessity of family and individual religion for the perpetuity of the church and the advancement of all her enterprises, and request the presiding elders to have the pastors to report the number of family altars in their charge to the next Conference.

Resolved, That we will recommend to our people a more careful study of the Word of God, remembering that his Word, as interpreted by our experience, is the strength we have to help others into the light.

J. Ritchey, Chairman.

Bible Cause.

Your Committee on Bible Cause beg leave to report as follows:

By amount received in cash, $93.05; by amount received in vouchers, $150.77; by amount Bibles sold, $185.50; total for 1896, $428.32. The total amount received for this purpose in 1895 was $331.63, showing an increase in this year's collections of $86.69.

One of the most urgent demands upon the Christian world to-day is printing of God's Word in the languages and dialects of earth. Wherever the American Bible Society has succeeded in doing this, it has wonderfully facilitated personal missionary effort. The entrance of the Bible into the dark places of earth is the divine call for consecrated personal touch, and the glad herald of gospel conquest. It is a fact worthy of your consideration that while personal missionary effort is forbidden in some parts of the foreign field, the printed Word of the living God, bearing the impress of governmental recognition, is allowed the utmost freedom.

The demand of the American Bible Society in the foreign field is keeping pace with the wonderful missionary spirit of the age. The twofold work of printing the Bible in every language, and supplying the home land, is the problem that confronts the society at this crisal moment in its history. We, therefore, suggest that our church be doubly alive to the great object of this society, and recommend, first, that while the General Conference makes it the imperative duty of every Methodist preacher to present this cause to their congregations, that we urge every member of our church to contribute something to this work, and that every member of the Conference give at least one dollar to this cause.

Secondly, your committee recommend for the home field the establishment of Bible repositories at the most accessible points in the various charges of our Conference. To this end we are authorized by the society to say to the members of this Conference that upon suitable recommendation the society will furnish Bibles to responsible persons on sixty days' credit. It is still the object of the society to supply cheap Bibles to Sabbath-school children at one half the cost of publication.

We heartily endorse and commend the labors of Rev. J. W. McLaurin, and ask the co-operation of the brethren of our Conference.

W. J. O'Bryant, Chairman.

Church Extension.

The Board of Church Extension report as follows:

1. The Woman's Parsonage and Home Mission Society is doing a work which we heartily commend, and we urge upon our preachers to assist them in their work. They have requested us to publish the names of their officers, which are as follows: President, Mrs. H. W. Foote; first vice-president, Mrs. Logan Walker; second vice-president, Mrs. A. B. Finley; recording secretary, Mrs. D. L. Cogdell; corresponding secretary, Mrs. J. S. Featherstun; auditor, Miss J. R. Beir; treasurer, Miss Rewan Thayer; editor, Mrs. H. W. Foote.

2. We urge upon our preachers, in making application for aid, that they apply for no more than they actually think is absolutely necessary.

3. We again remind the preachers that we help to finish churches and not to begin them.

Sunday-School Board.

It has come to pass in our religious economy as a denomination, that the work of teaching the Scriptures to the children devolves largely on the Sunday-school. That many schools of our Conference are highly efficient and keep in touch with the advanced thought and methods of this age of improvement can be truthfully said. That most of the Sunday-schools have some efficient officers and teachers is also true. But this Board can not discharge fearlessly and conscientiously its duty without calling attention to much non-attendance of the children of Methodist families upon Methodist Sunday-schools all over our Conference; to much lack of system in many schools, and to great lack of teaching skill among our teachers. This Board urges upon both ministry and laity the great importance of weekly teachers' meetings for the discussion of the lesson and better methods of work.

We recommend a wider use of our Sunday-school literature, and we commend to the teachers as an indispensable aid in discharging their arduous duties the use of the Sunday-school Magazine, issued from our own Publishing House.

We urge upon our superintendents the purchase for the use of the teachers of some of the many excellent books on Sunday-school methods and history now issuing from our own and other religious presses of the country, as well as technical treatises on pedagogy in general. Our schools are not so well supplied with maps, charts, and teaching apparatus as they should be. While all can not be done at once, a general awakening along the lines indicated is desirable in many places.

Our entire connection shows an increase of 7,518 scholars and 233 teachers during past year; our own Conference reports an increase of 5 in schools, 84 in teachers and officers, and 274 in pupils, for the same period.

Rev. G. W. Bachman made his report, showing that during the past Conference year he has visited 56 charges and 71 churches in discharging his duty as Sunday-school agent. We recommend his reappointment at the same salary.

To the end of compiling more accurate statistics showing our real progress or retrogression, as the case may be, in each charge, so as to have some basis upon which to erect plans for the future development of the work, it is resolved that the secretary of the Board be instructed to have printed blank reports to be placed in the hands of each pastor, to be filled out and returned to the same officer by or before the next Annual Conference, showing:

1. The number of societies in each charge.

2. The number of schools in each charge.

3. The number of scholars enrolled in each school for the year.

4. The number of Methodist scholars in other schools.

5. The number of Methodist scholars not in school.

6. The number of adults who attend each school.

7. The number of Methodist parents who do not attend school.

8. The number of churches which observed Children's Day.

9. The amount of collections on Children's Day.

Memoirs.

Rev. T. B. Malone.

Thomas Banister Malone, son of Jordan A. and Lettia Andrews Malone, was born in Williamson county, Tenn., Nov. 27, 1852, and died of pneumonia at West Point, Miss., March 10, 1896. He received his education in the Franklin (Tenn.) High School; was converted Aug. 12, 1866, at Mt. Carmel, a Cumberland Presbyterian Church in Williamson county, Tenn.; licensed to preach by the Quarterly Conference of Franklin station, Aug. 16, 1873 (William Burr, P. E.); admitted on trial into the Tennessee Conference at Columbia, Tenn., Oct. 9, 1876; was received into full connection at Clarksville, Oct. 13, 1878, and ordained deacon by Bishop H. H. Kavanaugh; transferred to the North Mississippi Conference, October, 1879, and ordained elder at Columbus, Miss., December, 1880 by Bishop Robert Paine. Was married at Goodlettsville, Tenn., to Miss Lizzetta C. Shivers, Sept. 22, 1880. Bro. Malone served the following charges: 1876, supply Bedford circuit, Tennessee Conference; 1877, Oakland mission; 1878, Forest Grove mission; 1879, Gallatin circuit; 1880, Austin station, North Mississippi Conference; 1881–2, Deer Creek circuit; 1883–4, Senatobia station; 1885, Corinth station; 1886, Winona station; 1887–90, Crawford circuit; 1891–2, Ripley and New Albany station; 1893–4, Grenada station; 1895–6, West Point station. This is a brief record of the twenty-one years of the man's itinerant life.

Bro. Malone was a delicate man when he joined Conference, and his reception was opposed by some very influential members on the ground that he would break down in a little while and be left a charge on the Conference. But he developed into a strong man, and after twenty years of hard work was a stronger man than when he entered.

As a preacher, he ranked with the foremost men of our Conference. He was fearless in his denunciation of sin; hence made some enemies; but the best people in his charge loved him to a man. He had many gifts. His power over children, and the young people generally, was wonderful. He was always in demand at Conference for the children's mass meetings. He was counted a revivalist among us; was fitted for revival work, and loved it, and was never happier than when his own church was in the midst of a great revival. He loved to preach the doctrines of the church, and his sermons were clear and strong. He probably had no equal in the Conference as a singer, and there are but few of us who have not been moved to tears and inspired to a better life under the power of his song. He was quick and impulsive, and sometimes sharp even toward his friends; but if he found he had wounded a friend, he was much more deeply wounded. He was as free from bearing malice as any man I ever knew; was as tender as a girl in his feelings, and loved his friends with all the fervor of his soul. He was able and eloquent in prayer, and especially in prayer at the home altar. I have not known him surpassed in tenderness and eloquence in the family worship.

In his early life he learned the printer's trade, and had a fondness and peculiar fitness for the newspaper work as long as he lived. He was a racy and entertaining writer, and was nearly always sought by the leading papers to report the work of our Annual Conferences. For a number of years he edited our Conference journal, and as to how well it was done, his work speaks for itself. He loved the life to which God had called him, and resisted many tempting offers to enter again the newspaper world. He never failed to go promptly to the work to which he was appointed, and to enter into the fight for the Master with all the strength of his soul. Sometimes he felt that his appointment was a mistake, and that he would do the best work possible, and at the end of the year ask for a location; but God so blessed him in all his work that he always went up to Conference happy.

He probably did the best work of his life in his last charge, and had a stronger hold on the hearts of the people of West Point than any other man who has served them. All places of business in the town closed for his funeral. The large new church could not accommodate all the people who wanted to attend. Bros. Kendall, Sullivan, Thames, Burroughs, Shumaker, Thomas, Briggs, Broiles and Duncan—members of the Conference—were present, some of them taking part in the service. The pastors of all the other churches in town were present.

His last sickness was short. He conducted his prayer meeting service Wednesday evening, but told the congregation he was too sick to sing. He was not thought to be dangerously ill till Sunday night following. He was then found to be in a dying condition. When told by his loving wife that he must soon leave them, he said: "It's all right. You and the children will come on." When his sisters Eva and Sallie came he said to them: "It's all right. It's all right." He was too weak to talk much—gave a few directions about some private matters, and peacefully died. We buried him in the beautiful cemetery at West Point by the side of Bro. Babb, who died pastor of the church nineteen years before. He requested to be buried with the people of his own charge.

Personally (pardon me), the writer of this memoir feels that he has lost one of the truest, sweetest friends a man ever had. For more than twenty years he had been like a brother to me. Not one sharp word from his pen or lips during all those years. He had no trouble that was not made known to me. His joys also were all shared with me. I have felt no such loss in the death of any man. I knew him to be a good man. And he was ready for the call of the Master. We shall see him again, and hear him sing.

I ask a place in the affections of every member of the Conference for his wife and seven children.

Jno. W. Bell.

Rev. T. B. Hargrove.

Rev. T. B. Hargrove, of the North Mississippi Conference, and pastor of the church at Hernando and Coldwater, died suddenly in his pulpit at Coldwater on the morning of Sunday, Jan. 26, 1896. He was born in Lowndes county, Miss., Feb. 4, 1849. His childhood and youth were favored with superior advantages, tending to social and mental culture of a high order. He was a graduate of the State University at Oxford. In hopeful young manhood he was happily married to Miss Mary Lipscomb, daughter of Dr. W. L. Lipscomb, of Columbus, Miss. He was admitted on trial into the North Mississippi Conference, in session at Starkville, in the year 1888; ordained deacon by Bishop Galloway, at Grenada, in 1890; and elder by Bishop Granbery, at Corinth, 1892. His first appointment was Pleasant Grove circuit, which he served with great acceptability for one year, after which he was appointed to Greenwood station, which he served faithfully for three years, and was thence removed to Sardis and Davis Chapel, where also he remained three years. At the late session of his Conference he was appointed to the pastoral charge of Hernando and Coldwater. In all these charges he made proof of his high calling, and left upon them the impress of a faithful minister of the Lord Jesus, and of a devoted pastor. He loved his people, and his people loved him.

Bro. Hargrove brought with him into the work of the ministry a consecrated life, a cultivated mind, an unflagging energy, a steady, burning zeal, and a loving spirit. All these he placed as a living sacrifice upon the altar of God's service. He was a high-toned Christian gentleman, an earnest servant of Christ and of the church, a sympathizing friend, a tender shepherd of the flock, and a good preacher. With a kind word for everyone, of affable manners and pleasant address, he made many friends wherever he labored. He was, however, a man of decided opinions and strong convictions, and was ever ready, when occasion required, to give expression to the same. With such endowments of mind and heart and character, it is not wonderful that his ministry was successful, and his labors crowned with abundant fruit. Although he had been in the itinerant ranks but little over eight years, yet he had taken position as one of the influential members of the Conference.

Bro. Hargrave and his faithful companion and co-worker went to his last field of labor with high purpose, and their best energies consecrated to the service of God and the church. Already had they won their way to the affections of the people of Hernando and Coldwater, and the future before them was full of hope and promise, when he was called so suddenly from the scene of his loved employment to his reward above.

On the morning of his death he went into the church at Coldwater, and addressed himself to the work of the sanctuary, to his congregation, apparently in his usual health. His text was taken from the triumphant words of St. Paul in II. Tim. iv, 7: "I have kept the faith." He read, however, in connection, the entire verse or passage. He spoke, first, of different kinds of faith, and then of the faith of the apostle in the text. He had been preaching about twenty minutes when he seemed to have difficulty in giving utterance to some thought or expression. Making a second effort, he said, "Have faith in the Lord Jesus Christ." Having spoken these, his last words, there was a movement or so, and an exclamation, indicative of bodily distress. He then turned as if to reach his chair, and sank beside it in the pulpit. In a moment friends were at his side. But the spirit had fled; the faithful, loving pastor was dead!

In the midst of his days, at life's high noon, a brother beloved has been called away from us; called away from abundant labors on earth to his heavenly reward. He left no token for his brethren; spoke no last words of testimony; but his record is on high. A good soldier of Christ, he died with his armor on in the forefront of the battle.

And ceased at once to work and live."

T. C. Wier.

Rev. James P. Moore.

James Pinkney, son and seventh child of George A. and Nancy E. Moore, was born near Muttons Springs, Attala county, Miss., Dec. 9, 1847. He was raised in the home of his nativity. Undergoing the changes and following the pursuits of a country life, he developed into a healthy, active, amiable youth. When about nineteen years old, while attending a meeting conducted by the Rev. Robert Clark, he was awakened, and, after several days wrestling with the Lord, he received the blessing.

It was in the silent hush
Of nature's sable night,
When none but God was near,
He first saw divine light.

Thus out of darkness he saw light, and in death he found eternal life.

His brother says of him: "I can never forget his appearance the morning after his conversion. While mother prepared breakfast he followed her everywhere she went, glorifying God, telling her how happy he was. Ever after that day he lived a devoted Christian life."

Soon after his conversion, with two neighbor boys he organized a young men's prayer meeting, which was faithfully kept up for some time, resulting in the conversion of quite a number of precious souls. Thus they labored until the duties of life called the workers into other fields of usefulness.

The Cumberland Presbyterian Church was his first choice; but at the time of his conversion there was no church of that denomination near him, so he joined the Methodist Protestant Church. But in 1868 he went to the Cumberland Presbyterian Church. About the year 1869, while going to school, he first received the impression that he ought to preach the gospel. To him a call to preach was a call to prepare to preach. Accordingly, in 1871 or 1872 he joined the Yazoo Presbytery, and went immediately to Cooper Institute, in Lauderdale county, Miss. Here, with but little means, by self-denial and close application, he acquired a fairly good education. But when his school days were over he found himself in debt, and nothing to pay it with. It is to his memory's honor to say, though it took him several years, he paid every cent of this debt.

He was ordained at Huntsville, Montgomery county, Miss., in 1876 or 1877, and for fifteen years he served his church faithfully, almost without money and without price, teaching school to eke out a scant living. It was in this capacity the writer first knew him, being a pupil of his in 1884. By kindness he soon won his way to the hearts of all his pupils. He was one of the most guileless, sweetest-spirited and kindest-hearted men I ever knew. To know him truly was to love him.

On Dec. 10, 1882, he was happily married to Miss Lucinda E. Lamb—a gentle and amiable country girl, a fit companion for such a spirit as his was. Of this union came one child—Pearl, a sweet girl of thirteen summers, who bears the impress of her sainted father.

Feeling that his sphere of usefulness was limited in the Cumberland Presbyterian Church, and desiring to devote all of his time to the ministry, he joined the North Mississippi Conference in 1892. From 1892 to 1894 he served the Marietta circuit. He was moved to the Okolona circuit, December, 1894, and there he finished his life's work, laid down his cross and received the crown. At the quiet parsonage in Aberdeen, just as the sun was setting on Aug. 5, 1896, quietly and peacefully he crossed the last river. His last words were: "I am going home to die no more. God bless you all." It was said of him a truer man never lived.

Farewell, farewell, dear brother;
As we once more come together
With us you can not meet,
Your smiling face we can not greet;
But where thou hast gone
We'll all come soon;
Year by year, one by one,
We are gathering, gathering home.

A Christmas Trip.

The thousands of Texans who came from the South Atlantic States find much pleasure in reverting to the happy days of long ago when they were children, and often they awake at night to recall those scenes of yore which gave to life a charm, and which now come in later years as visions of joy. There is a tender spot in every heart for the old home, and the memories which cluster about the dear old spot are solaces in the weary, weary struggle we make day by day to build in our new Eldorado a home to which our children in future time will turn, as we turn now to the old place where our loved ones in the evening of life await the final summons.

The Texas and Pacific Railway Company again offers you the opportunity to go "back to the old home." Round-trip excursion tickets will be on sale from all points on the system on Dec. 21 and 22, 1896, to points in the Southeastern States, at one fare for the round trip, tickets good 30 days from date of sale. See your nearest ticket agent for further information, and do not fail to send eight cents postage to the undersigned for a copy of the finest publication on Texas ever issued, to show to your friends at home.

Temperance.

Your committee rejoice to report progress in all our temperance movements. The prohibition sentiment is permeating and taking deeper root in all the educational, social and religious life of our people. Our State is almost free from the responsibility involved in the liquor traffic. By the legal restraints thrown around the saloon, by the local-option law, the traffic is almost outlawed in Mississippi. The people who love morality, sobriety, industry and economy are masters of the situation, and can, by pressing the battle, destroy their greatest foe; therefore, be it

"Resolved, That we continne to agitate the canse of temperance reform through our schools, churches, and homes.

"Resolved, That we recommend as delegates to the National Convention of the American Anti-Saloon Lesgne, to be held at Washington, D. C., Dec. 8–10, 1896, the following delegates: J. A. Bowen, Amos Kendall. Alternates: R. M. Standefer, T. W. Lewis."

O. L. SAVAGE, for Com.

Board of Missions.

We take pleasnre in reporting an increase over last year in the amonat of the collections.

The result of the work in Water Valley is gratifying. The appropriation for next year is one hundred dollars less than was made last year. At the suggestion of the presiding elder of the Columbns district and the concurrence of the Bishop, city work is to be inaugurated in Columbus. As leaders of the people and to whom the gospel of the grace of God has been committed, the preachers can do much for the cause of missions by showing the people the great opportnnity afforded us, and the obligation thns bronght upon us.

In a commnnication from onr Missionary Secretaries we are reminded of the disciplinary provision for the organization of our Snnday-schools into missionary societies, and the holding of the missionary mass meetings in every pastoral charge.

We urgently recommend that collections be taken early in the year, for two reasons: first, more money will be secured during the year, and, second, it will save interest. One hundred dollars sent to the treasurer in the beginning of the year is worth more than one hundred and five dollars paid at the end of the year. We recommend that an effort be made to secure a contribution from every member of the church in our bounds. We further recommend the circulation of our missionary literature. It will aid us in awakening interest in and giving the people information about the work being done by our church for the nations groping in darkness, feeling after God.

The faith and zeal of our sisters of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of the North Mississippi Conference is truly encouraging, and their success wonderful. As the God of all nations is enlarging their opportunities, may his wisdom and grace enable them to secnre workers and means to meet them promptly and fully. Let us help them. They inform ns throngh a communication to the Conference Board that "Our Conference stands fonrth among 35 Conferences of tho Woman's Board of Missions, having contribnted $2 890.15."

J. W. PRICE, Chairman.

District Conference Records.

We, your Committee on District Conference Records, beg leave to summit the following report:

1. Sardis District Conference Record is not neatly kept, being badly blotted and fails to show adjournment, and does not show that president signed the Minutes.

2. Aberdeen Record does not show the different sessions of the Conference separately, and does not give account of religious services as it should.

3. Grenada Record has reports as in Quarterly Conference record. We think the reports should be written as they are made in District Conference.

4. Columbus, Durant, Corinth and Greenville Records are properly recorded.

5. Holly Springs and Winona Records have not been before the committee.

J. W. TREADWELL,
For Committee.

Board of Colportage.

Your Board of Colportage ask leave to submit the following report:

Bro. Bachman, our Conference colporteur, has visited 6 District Conferences, 56 pastoral charges, 71 churches; sold $2,134 85 worth of books, $393 90 worth of periodicals. He is doing an excellent and much needed work along this line, and we heartily commend him to both ministers and laity within our bounds. He, through invitation, has visited the Memphis Conference and sold some books within its bonnds.

Yonr Board nrge that quarterly settlements be made with colporteur. We recommend the reappointment of Bro. Baohman as colporteur, and insist that the preachers and laity patronize him when practicable.

T. C. WIER,
Chairman.

Epworth League Board.

We observe with pleasnre the constant growth of interest in the Epworth League movement throughout our church generally, bnt regret the decline in our own Conference, as the following statistics will show: Number of Leagues reported at the last Anual Conference, 60; membership, 2,094. The report this year will show number of Leagues, 56; membership, 2,249.

We believe the wisdom of the General Conference has been fully demonstrated in the practical workings of the Epworth League, and that the League has greatly enhanced the piety and church loyalty of our young people, and is fast cultivating a taste for good literature, and more moral, elevated social life, and thus, as we fondly hope, doing away with questionable amusements and pernicious literature.

We regard this institution as among the first in importance, and one the possibility of which commends us to a more earnest and faithful appreciation of it according to direction given in the Discipline. This imposes a duty on each of us, recognizing which we express our determination to be fully loyal by resolving:

1. That we will each do what we can to make our State League Conference at Water Valley a perfect success.

2 That we will each co-operate in an effort to hold a District League Conference in each district.

3. That we will each study the League, its work and purposes, and try to organize Leagues wherever we have suitable young people.

4. That we will labor to secure a liberal circulation of the Epworth Era, the organ of the Epworth League, and also the Reading Course into each League as a means of advancing the work.

BEN P. JACO,
Chairman.

Sabbath Observance.

We believe that in order to bring this important subject before the mind and command the attention of the world, it must be done by object-lessons from Christian lives, and in order to a constraining influence from these lives there must be implanted in the heart a principle which will give birth to a constant and healthy Christian sentiment on this subject. If we ever expect to awaken the conscience of the masses on this subject, it must be when the Christian conscience is made sensitive to the evils of willful neglect, thoughtless abuse and wicked desecration of God's holy day.

Obedience may be consistent with defects, but never with partialities. Our Lord has declared the impossibility of partial obedience; guilty in part, guilty in all, is his verdict against this kind of obedience. If a violation and disregard of the Sabbath which stood as a monument to God's creative power and energy, brought such disaster and ruin upon ancient Israel, may we not fear a like visitation of divine condemnation if we lightly esteem or willfully disregard that sacred day which marks that more glorious event to us of re-creation and redemption through Christ Jesus.

In view of the importance which necessarily attaches to this subject, and the tendencies towards Sabbath desecration which largely prevails in many sections, your committee would respectfully ask the adoption of the following resolution:

As members of this Annual Conference, we will not only preach Sabbath observance, but we will practice the same, by a rigid and persistent abstinence from those things which are so commonly practiced by our people, such as using the Sunday train, visiting the postoffice, countenancing and perusing the Sunday paper—in fact, using this day for secular and pleasurable purposes, instead of giving it wholly to God in religious worship and practice.

J. T. MURRAH, Chairman.

Constipation is the start of nearly all sickness in the world. It not only makes a man sick, but it depresses him mentally. It gives him "the blues." He is plunged in the depths of despondency. As he gets rid of his constipation, he feels himself lifted out of the depressing darkness back into the light of health and good feeling. The alarming prevalence of this really dangerous, seemingly insignificant disorder, many years ago induced Dr. Pierce to prepare his since world-famous "Pleasant Pellets." They are designed to do just one thing, and they do it. They restore the bowels and liver to a healthy, natural action. One little "Pellet" is a gentle laxative, and two a mild purgative. They cure headache, heart-burn, sour stomach, flatulency, biliousness, foul taste in the mouth, and all the other disagreeable symptoms of constipation. Druggists sell them, but look out that your druggist is honest with you, and gives you what you ask for. Don't accept a substitute.

There would be less sickness in America if every home library contained a copy of Doctor Pierce's great work, "The People's Common Sense Medical Adviser." It is exactly what its name implies. It is the people's text-book of medicine, prepared by a regular, practicing physician, eminent in his profession, and now—as for thirty years—the head of one of the greatest medical and surgical institutes in the world—The Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, at Buffalo, N. Y. It is full of simple, inexpensive, common sense remedies for the cure of the common ailments that arise in every family. By following its advice, many illnesses are nipped in the bud, which might otherwise become serious and dangerous. This great book will be sent absolutely free, in paper-covers, to any one who will send twenty-one one-cent stamps, to pay the cost of mailing only, to the World's Dispensary Medical Association, No. 663 Main Street, Buffalo, N. Y. If French cloth binding is desired, send ten cents extra (thirty-one cents in all).

LOUISIANA ANNUAL CONFERENCE.

The Louisiana Annual Conference opened in Ruston, La., Dec. 9, at 9 o'clock; Bishop E. R. Hendrix in the chair. After religious services conducted by the Bishop, in which the entire Conference participated, Revs. J. T. Sawyer, H. H. Ahrens, W. G. Evans and T. L. Lallance were elected secretaries. The hours for meeting were fixed from 9 A. M. to 1:30 P. M. The following committees were elected:

Conference Relations—J. O. Bennett, R. S. Isbell, J. F. Scurlock, J. B. Cassidy.

On District Conference Records—N. S. Cornell, S. B. Beall, J. H. Brown.

On Temperance—T. J. Upton, D. C. Barr, J. F. Patterson.

On Bible Cause—C. M. Lyons, J. R. Roy, H. J. Boltz.

On Church Publications—E. N. Evans, A. D. McVoy, H. R. Singleton.

On Sunday-schools—J. F. Foster, H. H. Ahrens, R. S. Colier, I. T. Reames, Wm. Schuhle, M. G. Jenkins, J. M. Wyatt, T. J. Martin, J. L. Foster, W. Round.

The following wore referred to the Committee on Conference Relations for superannuation: P. H. Dieffenweirth, J. L. Wright, J. Fulton, E. W. Yancey, G. Jackson, J. H. Stone, R. S. Trippett, E. B. Foust, C. R. Godfrey, T. S. Randle, J. B. Walker.

Rev. C. Keener was referred to the committee for supernumerary relationship.

A motion prevailed prohibiting the payment of money to the different treasurers during Conference hours.

Communications were read from the Publishing House, Sunday-school editor, Board of Missions, Boards of Education and Epworth League, and referred to the proper committees.

Question 20 was called, and the characters of the following ministers, after giving their report, were passed: Revs. J. T. Sawyer, R. W. Tucker, J. L. P. Sheppard, J. D. Harper, B. F. White, J. L. Pierce, S. J. Davies, F. N. Parker, H. H. Ahrens, J. E. Densen, H. S. Johns, L. A. Reed, F. S. Parker, T. L. Lallance, J. F. Scurlock, H. R. Singleton, J. W. Wynn, J. J. Kelly, S. S. Keener, N. J. Roberts, G. D. Anders, J. P. Haney, T. J. Upton, J. F. Foster, F. D. Van Valkenburgh, C. W. Carter, and J. B. A. Ahrens.

The following young ministers were admitted on trial: P. H. Fontaine, J. C. Sligh, P. R. Knickerbocker, W. H. Ledbetter.

The following surrendered their credentials: C. E. McDonald, W. W. Buford, and Robert Harry.

Revs. Edwards and Boone, of the Baptist Church, were introduced to the Conference.

A resolution was introduced and unanimously carried that the Bishops be requested to fix Thursday instead of Wednesday for the opening of the Conference.

A motion was made and carried that Rev. R. J. Harp preach the semi-centennial sermon on Thursday.

Notwithstanding the great financial depression during the past year, the various churches' collections will compare favorably with reports of last year.

As the superannuated ministers gave their report of the work they were able to do, the large congregation was moved as seldom before. As these old soldiers of the cross spoke of their hardships and burdens, yet thanked the Lord for his goodness, many eyes were dim with tears. After the close of their remarks an appropriate stanza was sung.

SECOND DAY.

The roll was called, and it was noticed that seldom did so many ministers answer to their names.

The Bishop decided that the district parsonage of the Baton Rouge district be divided with the Woodville district, of the Mississippi Conference.

Rev. J. L. P. Sheppard read the report of Pierce and Paine College. The report showed that one wing of the school had been sold. The money from the sale was turned over to the Conference.

Bishop Lane, of the Colored Methodist Church, was introduced to the Conference.

Question 2 was called. W. H. Hatfield, F. N. Sweeney, Eli E. Riggs, J. M. Alford and C. D. Atkinson, Thomas Carter was advanced to the class of the second year.

Question 8. "What traveling preachers are elected deacons?" R. W. Vaughan, C. C. Miller, I. L. Bronson, W. A. Benton, T. M. Wafer.

The following resolution was unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That we deeply sympathize with our beloved senior Bishop, J. C. Keener, and his family in the sorrow that has come to them in the death of Miss Emma Keener, the only daughter who had been left to them, and we assure them of our constant affection and prayers.

The Bishop called on Dr. C. W. Carter to lead in prayer. He did so, and with much feeling prayed for the Bishop and his family.

The reports of the Board of Trustees of Centenary and Mansfield Colleges were referred to the Board of Education.

Rev. J. A. McLees, of the Presbyterian Church, was introduced.

Rev. Lonis E. Wicht was discontinued at the request of his presiding elder.

Dr. C. W. Carter announced that the Logal Conference would turn over $1,000 to the Joint Board of Finance.

Rev. W. T. Currie, of Montgomery, La., was charged by Rev. N. S. Cornell, of Coushatta, La., with utterances against the church and ministry. Rev. W. H. Laprade moved that a committee of investigation he appointed, and the following were appointed by the Bishop: W. H. LaPrade, T. J. Upton, J. A. Parker.

Rev. W. E. Akin was recommended to the Committee on Conference Relations for supernnmerary relation.

Revs. N. E. Joiner, W. D. Van Valkenburgh, A. W. Turner, R. Randle, W. H. Benton, E. T. Densen, E. L. Alford, A. S. J. Neill and T. M. Wafer were continned on trial.

W. T. Currie was continued in the class of the third year.

Bishop Lane, of the Colored Methodist Church in America, addressed the Conference in behalf of Lane Institute. The Bishop was given a most respectful hearing, and in the course of his remarks said that the Colored Methodist Church in America was the only child of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, and that his hope was that there would be no more children. At the conclusion of his remarks a collection was taken for Lane Institute, which resulted in $114 being received.

Dr. W. C. Black, editor of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, is here in the interest of the paper. Although a member of the Mississippi Conference, the Doctor is generally beloved by his fellows in the ministry of this State.

Rev. S. S. Keener, at 7 o'clock preached a very powerful sermon at the same place.

The Methodist Church was crowded to-night to listen to the semi-centennial sermon preached by the Rev. R. J. Harp, of Lake Charles, La. The sermon was full of historical interest, and was thoroughly enjoyed by all.

THIRD DAY.

The session was opened with religious exercises, conducted by Rev. T. K. Faunt LeRoy.

Rev. S. S. Holliday, of the East Texas Conference, was received by transfer.

A motion prevailed that an amount as large as the amount assessed for education be collected for the printing of the Minutes for next year. For this year's Minutes the preachers will buy the number necessary to pay for the printing.

C. C. Weir, having stood an approved examination, was advanced to the second year. J. M. Etheridge, of New Orleans; P. O. Lowery and M. F. Johnson were elected local deacons

The committee on examination in the case of Rev. W. T. Currie reported that a trial was not necessary.

Question 20 was called, and the names of J. A. Parker, J. S. Sanders, W. J. Porter, I. T. Reames, W. W. Drake, A. J. Notestine, H. Armstrong, R. M. Blocker, R. J. Harp, F. G. Hecutt, T. K. Faunt LeRoy, S. H. Whatley, R. P. Howell, M. C. Manley were called and their characters passed.

Rev. H. W. Wallace surrendered his credentials, and Rev. M. C. Manley was referred to the Committee on Conference Relation for superannuation.

Dr. Bingham, Secretary of Education, was introduced to the Conference.

The report on books and publications was read by Dr. A. D. McVoy, and Revs. S. S. Keener, F. N. Parker and J. T. Sawyer were elected as the Publishing Committee.

Dr. W. C. Black, editor of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE, addressed the Conference.

The following were admitted into full connection: R. W. Vaughan, C. C. Miller, I. L. Bronson, W. H. Benton and T. M. Wafer.

Question 20 was resumed, and the following were called and their characters were passed:

L. J. Jackson, R. S. Isbell, J. M. Johnston, J. E. Riddle, H. M. Banks, J. R. Roy, J. I. Hoffpanir, R. C. Grace, W. Schuhle, W. H. LaPrade, J. M. Brown, J. B. Williams, J. F. Patterson, N. S. Cornell, W. Moore, H. J. Boltz, T. M. Boynton, C. T. Munholland, C. P. Johnson, R. S. Colier, A. D. McVoy, B. H. Sheppard, H. W. May, R. Randle, John A. Miller, C. F. Staples, J. O. Bennett, D. C. Barr, J. H. Brown.

The missionary anniversary held to night in the Methodist Church was a success in every particular. The address delivered by Bishop Hendrix was practical and pointed. The Bishop's recent experience in foreign countries makes him one of the leading men in missionary matters.

FOURTH DAY.

This morning at an early hour most of the preachers assembled in the Methodist Church to attend a sunrise prayer meeting. The services were led by Rev. J. L. Wright, a superannuated preacher of the Conference.

At 9 o'clock promptly the Bishop called the Conference to order.

Rev. B. T. Crows, of Mansfield, led the religious services. His prayer for the superannated preachers was most touching.

Question 20 was called, and the names and the characters of the following were passed: E. N. Evans, W. J. Roberts, H. W. Knickerbocker, R. A. Davis, J. W. Davis, W. H. Boll, J. B. Cassidy, T. H. McClendon.

Rev. Lewis A. Reed, of New Orleans, made his report to-day, not being present at the first session.

The report of the Bible cause was read by Rev. Wm. Schuhle. Adopted.

Rev. Mr. McLaurin, agent of the American Bible Society, was introduced to the Conference by the Bishop. Mr. McLaurin made a stirring address on the subject.

The question was called: "What preachers have died during the past year?" and with much joy the answer was made—none.

Mrs. Fullilove, president of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, was introduced to the Conference. Mrs. Fullilove then read her annual address. The paper was of the highest order.

Rev. T. J. Upton read the temperance report. It was adopted.

Rev. H. R. Singleton was appointed on the Committee of the Fourth Year.

W. B. Thomson read the report of the finances for the missionary cause, which showed that $6,302.22 was collected during the past year for foreign and domestic missions.

The Bishop stated that there were fifty-one Epworth Leagues in the State, and that $325 had been raised for the support of a foreign missionary.

Rev. J. M. Henry read the report of the Epworth League Board. It was adopted

Rev. W. T. Currie was located at his own request.

The Committee on Conference Relations submitted its report, and the following were elected supernumeraries: Revs. Christian Keener and C. D. Atkinson, and the following superannuates: P. H. Dieffenweirth, J. L. Wright, J. Fulton, E. W. Yancey, G. Jackson, J. H. Stone, R. S. Trippett, E. B. Foust, C. R. Godfrey, J. B. Walker, T. S. Randle, T. B. White and M. C. Manley.

Rev. J. F. Foster read the reports of the Sunday-school Board and the Ministerial Aid Society. Rev. F. S. Parker made a short address in behalf of the Ministerial Aid Society.

Dr. Bingham, Secretary of Education of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, made a strong address in behalf of education.

A motion was made that the Conference adjourn to meet at 3 P. M. Carried.

A collection was taken up for Rev. M. C. Manloy.

At 3 o'clock P. M. the Conference again assembled, Bishop Hendrix in the chair, and Rev. S. S. Keener leading the religious exercises.

The statistical secretary made public the following figures: 29,046 members, 1,143 infants baptized, 1,101 adults baptized, 13,412 Sunday-school scholars. During the year there was raised for presiding elders, $7,115.79; for preachers in charge, $52,143.19; for Bishops, $826.46; value of parsonages, $87,883.

Rev. J. I. Hoffpanir read the report of the Church Extension Board. The report was adopted.

Mrs. Randle read the report of the Woman's Parsonage and Home Mission Society. The financial report of the Board of Education was read and adopted.

N. S. Cornell read the report of the Committee on District Conference Records.

Crowley, La., was selected as the next place of holding the Conference.

SUNDAY.

Every church in the town was crowded to-day. The greatest crowd was at the Methodist Church, where Bishop Hendrix preached. After preaching a most powerful sermon, the following ministers were ordained deacons: W. Vaughan, C. C. Miller, I. L. Bronson and P. O. Lowry. At the same service the following were ordained elders: J. B. Kent, L. F. Jackson, R. H. Wynn, P. M. Brown and W. J. Roberts.

Dr. LaPrade's sermon at 3 P. M., was a masterpiece, and sparkled with the richest truths. At night Dr. Bingham, Secretary of the Board of Education, delivered a strong sermon before a packed congregation. Dr. C. W. Carter preached at the Baptist Church to a very large audience.

Rev. C. R. Montgomery has been transferred to the Pacific Conference.

At Ruston.

It was our privilege to spend Thursday and Friday of last week at Ruston, looking in on our brethren of the Louisiana Conference. The session so far as we witnessed its proceedings was a very harmonious and pleasant one. In keeping with his previous record, Bishop Hendrix captured the Conference. He is a model Bishop—one that can not be easily improved upon. His address to the class for admission was superb.

Ruston entertained the Conference most admirably. We are sure the brethren will be delighted when the time comes to go to Ruston again. We have never known a Conference so largely attended by lookers on. More people were present every day than could be seated. We heard two sermons during our stay—one by Rev. J. I. Hoffpauir, the other by Rev. S. S. Keonor. Both were clear, strong and spiritual.

Our Conference home was with Col. A. T. Prescott, president of the Louisiana State Industrial Institute and College, to whom and to his charming family we are under many obligations for their generous and cordial hospitality. We had as our fellow-guest our genial friend, Rev. J. W. McLaurin, of the American Bible Society. We also had delightful companionship with several members of the college faculty.

We regretted exceedingly that we could not remain to the close of the session, but owing to our protracted absence in attendance upon two previous Conferences this was impracticable. Bro. John A. Miller makes an admirable Conference host. We are indebted to Rev. H. H. Ahrens for efficient service in reporting the proceedings of the Conference.

NOTES.

On Thursday, Dec. 17, Miss Ackie Branch Williams, daughter of Rev. F. M. Williams, will be married to Mr. Allen Benedict Kling. The ceremony will take place at the Methodist Church, Satartia, Miss. We extend our heartiest congratulations.

Bishop Galloway passed through the city recently en route to the Florida Conference, over which he presided in place of Bishop Fitzgerald, who is sick in Memphis. He also passed through the city on his return, and paid the ADVOCATE office a much appreciated call.

In our issue of last week we spoke of Sister T. B. Clifford as "agent" of the Orphans' Home at Water Valley. We should have said "manager and matron." That is the position to which she was elected by the Board. Work on the building will begin soon. Several carloads of material have been received.

Rev. H. W. Rickey, of the Louisiana Conference, is to be married Thursday, Dec. 24, 1896, to Miss Octavia Wynn, daughter of Rev. J. F. Wynn. The interesting event will take place at the parsonage at Baker, La. May peace, prosperity and happiness be their portion through life!

Rev. Silas Cooper, a venerable local preacher widely known in Louisiana, died at his home in Rapides parish, Nov. 29. He was advanced in years and highly honored by those who knew him. He was at one time a member of the Louisiana Conference. A suitable memoir will soon appear from the pen of Rev. R. S. Isbell.

Report on Orphans' Home.

To the Bishop and Members of the North Mississipp' Conference:

The Board of Directors of the proposed Mississippi Methodist Orphanage begs leave to present the following as its annual report:

Acting under the authority conferred by the Annual Conferences at the last sessions held in December, 1895, the joint commission, representing the Mississippi and the North Mississippi Conferences, met in the city of Jackson on January 8, 1896, and organized the Board of Directors by electing W. A. Gunning, president; J. M. Wyatt, vice president; A. F. Watkins, secretary, and J. A. Bowen and M. L. Burton, treasurers. The name, "Mississippi Orphans' Home, M. E. Church, South," was adopted as the name of the proposed institution; a committee was appointed to procure a charter, and the secretary was ordered to publish advertisements for bids for location.

At Winona, Miss., on the twenty-third of April, a second meeting of the Board was held, at which the charter was adopted. The question of locating the Home was discussed, and after carefully considering the bids offered, the city of Water Valley was selected as the most eligible. At this meeting a resolution was adopted, requesting the election by each of the patronizing Conferences of one additional layman as a member of the Board.

In this connection we think it well to say that the selection of Water Valley as the site of the Home was not made because we counted it simply the best of the several locations offered us, but we thought it a very suitable location and a very liberal bid, and we have not ceased to congratulate ourselves and the church upon the very advantageous settlement of a question of such vital importance to the future of the institution. We have donated to us by the liberal and progressive citizens of this place fifty acres of land very suitable for our various purposes, and coming to within but little more than one-half mile to the railroad station and the center of the town. In addition, it is due to this place to say that it is an exceptionally healthful, moral and progressive city of five thousand people and a strong Methodist center.

At an adjourned meeting held in Water Valley, on April 24, committees were appointed to receive plans and estimates upon buildings, to secure bids upon material and to inquire into the matter of transportation. At a subsequent meeting at Jackson the plans for a handsome, commodious and well-adapted building were selected, and the contract for the material and erection of the building closed. Work upon the building will soon be begun, and we hope in the early Spring to report it ready for occupancy.

During the sessions of the Conferences in December, 1895, subscriptions were raised amounting in the aggregate to $3,000. Since that time, from the observance of "Orphans' Day" and from additional contributions, we have increased our fund, until to-day there is reported by the treasurers from the North Mississippi Conference $1,800 in cash and $225 in subscriptions; and from the Mississippi Conference $1,300 in cash and $1,300 in subscriptions, giving us a total of $3,100 in cash and $1,525 in subscriptions.

In conclusion, we respectfully beg you to grant our request for an additional layman on the Board of Directors, and suggest the name of Capt. I. T. Blount, of Water Valley. We also ask for authority to elect a superintendent for the Home after conferring with the Bishop and presiding elder, whose work for the ensuing year shall be under direction of the Board of Directors.

J. A. BOWEN, for the Board.

REPORT NO. 1.

We are glad to learn from Rev. W. C. Black, D. D., editor and publisher of our NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE, a highly gratifying statement as to the condition and management of that paper. Not a dollar of indebtedness has been incurred under his management, and arrangements have been made by which the old debt will, in a year or two, be settled. The general mechanical make-up of the paper has been greatly improved in the past year, and will soon be followed by other improvements. The editorial management is good, and promises to be better, furnishing us with pure and elevating contributions for reading and study, and is true to the doctrine and principles of our church. It has stood side by side with the growth and development of our church in the past, and has become a part of it in the present, and is indispensable to its future development and success. It is a necessary factor in the workings of our Protestant Christianity in Mississippi and Louisiana, and, therefore, we should foster and care for its every interest, and especially unite our every effort to increase its circulation among our people; therefore, be it

Resolved, That we, as preachers and laymen, recognizing its usefulness and its great need in our work, will use greater efforts and energy to increase its subscription among our people.

Resolved, That we commend the Rev. W. C. Black, D. D., for his faithfulness as editor and publisher, and will always welcome him to our sessions.

We recommend the reappointment of Drs. W. T. J. Sullivan, T. C. Wier and J. D. Cameron as members of the Publishing Committee of North Mississippi Conference.

The Christian Advocate continues to grow in its literary and religious character, and is now the equal, if not superior, of any like paper in our land. The Advocate was never more worthy of our support. It does not have the support that it should in our Conference. We should remember that it is our property and the official organ of our church, and that its influence and benefits can only be increased by extending its circulation. The character of the paper and our obligations as preachers and laymen demand an earnest and united effort to increase the subscription list. We learn that it has taken a high stand among the preachers of the M. E. Church, North, and that its circulation among them is increasing. May the same be said of our own preachers during the next year and for years to come!

The Epworth Era, we regret to say, is still behind, but pushing forward, and will soon be self-sustaining. It is brilliant and full of energy and life, and should be in the hands of all of our preachers, and introduced into every home circle of Methodism.

Our Sunday-school literature grows better and better each year, is an honor to our church, and reflects great credit upon the editors and publishers. The Magazine is all that we can ask, and has a circulation of 33,000. This book should be in the hands of every preacher, Sunday school superintendent, teachers, members of the senior classes of all Sunday-schools, and in every family in Methodism.

Our Bi-Monthly Review stands among the first of this country, for which we should feel justly proud.

J. R. D. KING,
For Committee.

REPORT NO. 2.

We have had before us the report of our Publishing House, which sets forth its wise management and continued prosperity. The capital now amounts to $708,760.50; the business last year, $350,512.66—gain in assets, $50,393.93. Gain in assets this year over last, $5,516.54. The Agents have again appropriated for the superannuates and widows and orphans of our Conferences the sum of $20,000. This last fact should be a great stimulus to us, and should inspire us to greater efforts in our work for and support of the House. Among the many new books published this year by the House we would call special attention to the "Child's Life in Our Mission Fields" and the "Young People's History of the Chinese," as they teach and deepen the interest of our young people in missions, and inspire them for mission work.

We are glad to have with us Drs. Boswell, Black and Steel, worthy editors of our publications, and also Dr. Palmore, of the St. Louis Advocate, whose interest is our interest, and will always welcome them to our sessions.

JNO. R. D. KING,
Chairman.

Board of Education.

To those institutions to which our Conference bears special relation we call attention as follows:

I.—VANDERBILT UNIVERSITY.

We commend this as the greatest of the educational institutions of Southern Methodism for its wide range and high grade of scholarship, for its large number of professional departments, and especially for its Biblical Department. We should co-operate in the effort to provide an endowment for this department.

II.—MILLSAPS COLLEGE.

We are much gratified at the prosperous opening of the present session, and the good conduct and manly spirit of the students. Again, we make mention of the liberality of Major Millsaps in providing a "Science Hall," and in giving his time and skill to the management of its financial interests. Here are twenty ministerial students, nine of whom are from the bounds of our Conference. The Law School, under the able management of Edward Mayes, LL.D., has begun remarkably well, having already enrolled twenty-seven students.

The strong religious influences make this college a desirable place to form the character of youth.

III.—GRENADA COLLEGIATE INSTITUTE

began this session with very flattering prospects, having 73 boarders in the college and 12 in town, and an enrollment of 153 students up to date. The management of the school and the work of the pupils is highly commendable. The girls are kindly watched over and faithfully instructed. Many improvements in the building have been made. The school is worthy of the patronage of our people.

IV.—EPWORTH COLLEGE (FORMERLY MALONE COLLEGE).

This institution, while not the property of the church, is thoroughly loyal to it and is doing a noble educational work in a community that is healthful, refined and cultured. At the opening of the present session it began a career of increased usefulness.

We offer the following resolutions in regard to the schools:

1. That Dr. W. B. Murrah be appointed President of Millsaps College.

2. That Rev. J. W. Malone be appointed President, and Rev. W. M. McIntosh agent of Grenada Collegiate Institute.

3. That Rev. J. W. Honnoll be appointed President of Epworth College.

4. That the following trustees be elected: (a) Of Millsaps College: S. M. Thames, J. W. Malone, J. R. Bingham, R. W. Jones, Jr.

(b) Of Grenada Collegiate Institute: J. W. Malone, T. W. Lewis, S. M. Thames, G. W. Jones, whose term will expire in 1899, and J. W. Griffin, Rowan Thayer, J. A. Bowen, whose terms shall expire in 1900.

(c) That the following be appointed trustees of Epworth College: Rev. J. D. Cameron, Rev. J. A. Randolph, Rev. Jno. W. Bell, Rev. J. A. Leach, Rev. J. S. Oakley, Rev. J. J. Brooks, Rev. T. W. Dye, Rev. R. A. Burroughs, Rev. J. C. Mimms, and T. G. Leach, R. G. McNamee, J. H. Bennett, W. R. Izell, R. K. Lockie, Chesley Daniel.

5. We recommend the reappointment of J. R. Bingham as Conference Secretary of Education.

6. We recommend that the election of Judge Newman Cayce as a trustee of Vanderbilt University be confirmed.

We recommend the following assessments and the following distribution by districts:

(1) An assessment of ($2,000) two thousand dollars for Millsaps College. (2) An assessment of $311 for the use of the General Conference Board. (3) An assessment of $400 for Paine and Lane Institutes. (4) That the first Sunday in April, or as soon thereafter as practicable, be named as Education Day throughout this Conference, in which all the preachers in charge of stations, circuits and missions shall preach on the subject of Christian Education.

R. W. JONES, Chairman.

Work among the Colored People.

Your committee appointed at the last session of our Conference to consider how we may most effectually co-operate with the Colored M. E. Church in giving the gospel to the colored people in the bounds of our Conference, beg leave to submit the following:

After a careful consideration of the subject, conversing with both colored preachers and Bishops and with many of our own preachers on the subject, we are not prepared to recommend any radical change in our present course; but that we avail ourselves of every opportunity to preach to the colored people, attend their Conferences, and give them such assistance as we can without in any way interfering with their present system of giving the gospel to their own people.

We would also commend the C. M. C. A. to our people as especially worthy any financial assistance they can give them.

J. W. HONNOLL, Chairman.

Suffering Women.

Alas! women do suffer. Why, we often cannot tell, but we know there is one great cause, and that is weakness. The headaches, the depressed feelings, the pains, the discouragements, indeed, almost all the misery has a common cause—weakness. At such times a woman always needs a friend that can be relied upon, and such a friend, for more than twenty years, has been that greatest of all remedies,

Warner's Safe Cure

By its purity and its power it furnishes a prompt relief for women in their hours of need, and if the grateful expressions which come up from the homes of the land about what SAFE CURE has done were printed, they would fill volumes. If you, reader, are a sufferer, can you not take hope from this suggestion?

peared, in this country at least, and apparently in Europe also to a considerable extent. The principal objection to it was loss of time. Several years were consumed in learning what could easily be taught, and better taught, in one-fourth the time. The lad was frequently subjected to the indignities of a kind of slavery, and generally forced to a routine of performance of labors with which he was already quite familiar, and from which he was learning nothing. Drunken masters and vicious surronndings very often formed also part of the situation. In place of this crude and incomplete mode, trades are now commencing to be taught as systematically as the arts and sciences. Teachers are selected for their intelligence, skill, devotion to the cause, and good morals, as well as good manners. The surroundings of the student—for such he is—are elevating. He has all the advantages of healthy competition, besides skilled instruction of a high grade and the use of the most improved tools and implements. A young man coming with good credentials from an accredited institution of that sort will be eagerly songht after. He will have no difficulty in getting good employment. And, besides being a thorough mechanic, he will be a gentleman and a good citizen, so far as education, example and prosperous association can make him such. In the experiments heretofore made, the new system is said to have given excellent results, and there can be but little doubt that it is destined to revolutionize the social and business standing of our mechanics.—Kennebec Journal.

North Mississippi Conference Notes.

One of the Methodist young ladies of Greenville said that Thursday, Thanksgiving Day, was the happiest day of her life. She had never seen so many Methodists together before.

Bishop Galloway spoke most pleasantly of the work of the Conference colporteur, Rev. G. W. Bachman. Said there was no one who was doing a better work as colporteur than Bro. Bachman.

Dr. Steel's sermon, Sunday night, was a masterpiece of logic, rhetoric, and oratory. It was a clear presentation of the doctrine of "The Judgment." The writer has scarcely heard it surpassed.

Dr. W. B. Murrah is one of the strong young men of our church. He made a fine showing for Millsaps College. This institution is doing a work of which the whole connection has cause to feel proud.

Rev. J. S. Oakley is one of the best secretaries in our connection. It is the rarest thing that a correction is ever offered. With Bishop Galleway in the chair and Bro. Oakley at the secretary's desk, business was pushed forward rapidly.

Bishop Galleway's Thanksgiving sermon was strong and comprehensive. It took a wide sweep. All denominations were alike delighted. It was a great congregation of representative people that assembled in Greenville's new temple of justice to hear this distinguished Mississippian. It was a great occasion.

Chancellor Kirkland amused the Conference by telling of the Arkansas preacher who said in open Conference that he had not read a theological work in forty years, when some of the good brethren said, "Amen!" One of the North Mississippi brethren explained that probably the "amen" meant to attest the truthfulness of the statement.

Dr. Lamluth made a stirring address at the missionary anniversary, Friday night. He told of a recent visit to Eastern Kentucky, where he found a great deal of ignorance and poverty. The hotel where he stopped was but poorly supplied with crockery, there being but one spoon for all the guests, which the woman wiped with her finger before passing it around.

Industrial Education.

One of the foremost features of the educational phase of our advancing civilization is the industrial school—the school where mechanical trades are taught. A generation ago the system by which trades were taught was apprenticeship. That system was very objectionable in several respects, and has disap-

Impatience of Opinion.

Impatience of opinion—the state of mind which refuses to listen quietly to the expression of sentiments at variance with its own—is a pretty sure mark of weakness. Those who indulge in it are more than half conscious that they are unable to maintain their ground by calm, straightforward argument, and thence they bring in the force of strong assertion to help them out. In the absence of convincing reasons, or of the skill to marshal them aright, they try to bear down an opponent by the strength of their will or the volume of their voice. They endeavor by the impetuosity of their attack to cover up the real feebleness of their battalions. This maneuver is so very common that it is usually seen through by the cool by-stander, if not by the person against whom it is used, and the fear of this makes the person using it all the more rattled and provoked.

Impatience of opinion is incipient intolerance. It is the deadly foe of the impartial interchange of thought which is so important an element of culture. It strangles that free and fair discussion by which so much of truth has been struck out and rightly eliminated from closely attendant error. It is an insult to man, and a sin against God. It involves impudent assumption and insufferable presumption. It makes a man intensely disagreeable and supremely ridiculous. It betrays a lack of trust in the divine might of truth, a total failure of confidence in the power of sober persuasion. It is evil, and only evil, and that continually. He who has allowed himself to become addicted to it should spare no pains to throw off its yoke and have done with it forever.—Zion's Herald.

and see the women who are using Pearline. It's easy to pick them out. They're brighter, fresher, more cheerful than the women who have spent twice as much time in the rub, rub, rub, of the old way. Why shouldn't they be? Washing with Pearline is easy.

And look at the clothes that are washed with Pearline. They're brighter, and fresher, too. They haven't been rubbed to pieces on a washboard. They may be old, but they don't show it; clothes washed with Pearline last longer.

Something Good in Dixie

Please understand I am a woman of Indiana, not of Dixie, but do appreciate this good; delight to acknowledge it that all persons afflicted as I have been may know there is hope and happiness for them. I had been a stammerer from childhood; sometimes as unable to speak as though dumb. Had tried several cures, but all of them failed. Then, as a last resort, I tried Rev. G. W. Randolph's Cure for Stuttering or Stammering, and now am CURED. Four days after complying with the requirements of this Cure, I received by mail that which enabled me to talk with such ease and infinite satisfaction, which, to one who endures the affliction as long and severely as I have, is a "veritable gladness in the soul." I have never seen Rev. Randolph, but have found him to be a man of his word, and is highly recommended to church circles, also by State officials. His Voice School, or Institute, is located at No. 468 Poplar Street, Memphis, Tenn., and to persons going to this school a cure is GUARANTEED. The Cure by mail gives the same happy results, if instructions are carefully followed, which even children can do, and those needing the benefit of this GOOD will find him so considerate in his terms they need not suffer these afflictions longer. Submitted for the sake of the unfortunate.

This treatment allays itching and irritation, soothes inflammation and painful swellings of the joints, softens hard, roughened skin, and purifies the perspiration.

To Whom it May Concern:

About three years ago I received a sample bottle of "Mul-en-ol." I had never heard of it before. I began using it, however, as occasion required, and soon found that it was all that is claimed for it, and more. For cuts, burns, bruises, scalds, and all kinds of cores, it is superior to any remedy I have ever used. It is also exceedingly efficacious in colic and diarrhœa. For sore throat it is incomparably better than anything I know of. I heartily recommend it as a medicine worthy of a place in every household. W. C. BLACK,
Editor Christian Advocate.

I have used Mul-en-ol, and find it good for many things, but especially for cutaneous diseases, cuts, burns, and corns. In every case it has been eminently successful and satisfactory. I do not want to be without it in my family. Please send it right away, and oblige, Yours truly,

To the Stewards of the Jackson District.

DEAR BRETHREN: Let me call your attention to the great necessity that you commence at once to meet the necessities of your pastors. Many of them are new men among you, and will, likely, come to you with depleted purses. A kindly word of assurance from you and a month's salary will go far to assure you a useful year on the part of your pastor. Let us all, pastors and stewards and people, commence at once, and work diligently in our several places

Our Machine Offer.

New Improved High-Arm "Arlington B" Self-Threading Sewing Machine.

A recorded certificate of warranty for 10 years accompanies each machine. The "Arlington B" is complete in every detail, combining all modern and late improvements, such as automatic bobbin winder, self-threading shuttle, self-setting needle, upper spring tension, etc.

The "Arlington B" self-threading sewing machine has a large high-arm, its mechanical appearance is perfect, its adjustment is absolute, positive take up, convenient foot-rest, with the best style furniture, either oak or walnut; in addition to which each machine is furnished with the best steel combination attachments free, as follows: One tucker, one foot ruffler, one set of plain hemmers (five different widths up to seven-eighths of an inch), one binder, one shirring plate and one under-braider, packed in a handsome velvet lined case. It is also furnished with one foot hemmer, one screw driver, one wrench, one oil can with oil, one gauge, one package of needles, six bobbins and one instruction book.

THE HEAD is strong and substantial; has large space under the arm for handling bulky goods, is finely japanned, and protected by a hard finish. Has so few bearings and frictions points that it is easily oiled and kept clean.

NEEDLE BAR is round, with adjustable bearings polished and fitted, insuring great wear, and can run a long time without oiling. It has a slack dip motion, relieving the strain upon the thread when the shuttle is passing through the loop. Using the adjustable take-up, controlling the threads perfectly on all grades of work.

IMPROVED AUTOMATIC BOBBIN WINDER which is so positive and reliable in its action that an imperfectly wound bobbin is an impossibility. So simple that a child can easily operate it. This valuable attachment renders possible a perfect control of shuttle tension.

SELF-THREADING—THE "ARLINGTON B" is self-threading, requiring no change from light to heavy work. Uses double thread, and makes the lock stitch.

THE NEEDLE is the same as used on the New Home machine, and is self-setting both as to height and position with reference to shuttle, with short blade and long shank, insuring great strength; finely polished.

SELF-THREADING SHUTTLE—A perfect steel cylinder shuttle with delicate and perfect tension, open at one end to allow the bobbin to be inserted without displacing any of the parts; runs loose in the shell without spring centre or point bearings, thus insuring an even tension; can be threaded in the dark, and easily understood.

LOCAL PULLEY for winding the bobbin without running the machine requires no change of adjustment, nor is it necessary to remove the work from the machine.

PARTS SUBJECT TO WEAR are made of the finest steel, case hardened, light and noiseless and are very durable.

OUR OFFER.

To anyone, not now a subscriber to this paper, who will send us $20.50, we will send the machine and the NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE one year. To old subscribers we make the following offer: Pay your subscription to April, '98, and send us $18.50 additional, and we will send you the machine.

We allow purchaser to test the machine for ten days. If at the end of ten days you are not satisfied, you have only to drop us a postal card, and your money will be refunded.

TO AGENTS:

CHRISTMAS CAROL.

The earth has grown old with its burden of care,
But at Christmas it always is young;
The heart of the jewel burns lustrous and fair,
And its soul full of music breaks forth on the air,
When the song of the angels is sung.

It is coming, old Earth, it is coming to-night!
On the snowflakes which cover thy sod
The feet of the Christ-child fall gentle and white,
And the voice of the Christ-child tells out with delight
That mankind are the children of God.

On the sad and the lonely, the wretched and poor,
That voice of the Christ-child shall fall;
And to every blind wanderer open the door
Of a hope that he dared not dream of before,
With a sunshine of welcome for all.

The feet of the humblest may walk in the field
Where the feet of the Holiest have trod;
This, this is the marvel to mortals revealed
When the all very trumpets of Christmas have pealed,
That mankind are the children of God.

A Campaign of Collections Is Needed.

The campaign of education on the missionary cause has been going on steadily. When shall a campaign of collections be inaugurated? How easily we can stand educating processes when there is no clinching of the arguments by offerings for the grand cause! In fact, educational processes have made some so delicate in refinement and tender-footed we can not press the missionary claims by a collection even at our Conference anniversaries. We can stand much enthusiasm if there is no collection, just as easy as for a retiring presiding elder to shout before the appointments are read ont who is put down at a first-class station—he can shout loud. So with missionary rallies, missionary conventions, missionary orations from Bishops who have circled the globe, all these merely educative processes are fine if not followed up by a collection something more eloquent than orations. The church has enough education. It is full time for the education to be applied in offerings for the grand cause. A man in debt scurries around and says to all his customers, "Pay me that thou owest," or is in hot chase after a remunerative bargain. With burning earnestness, a zeal born of the Holy Spirit, there must be a campaign of direct appeals for tithes, gifts, for this cause. To pay our missionary debt (for it should rest on every conscience in the church) is to make a direct appeal and keep at it till the load is lifted. We must bring up our tithes to the Lord's treasury. The last Missionary Review shows every Conference falling behind in collections except Montana. The deficit up to date of publication shows a decrease from last year of ($4,225) four thousand two hundred and twenty-five dollars. Why this deficit? Has our debt nothing to do with it? We can not advance either rapidly or substantially until this debt is settled. The church is bound to be discouraged, disheartened, as long as this weight is on the cause, ever handicapping all forward movements and taking much of the spirit out of the organized missions, and keeping from developing and enlarging as the Lord honors our noble band of missionaries. The debt is as a dark shadow over the whole cause. The intelligence of the church know of the debt, and while everybody is wondering over, the leaders of the church keep it as a secret, a sort of "bete noir"—not to be mentioned.

A campaign of collections, rallies, Conferences, conventions, prayer meetings on the debt must be put in force; all the oratious and enthusiasm harnessed to a great movement, so this millstone may be fully cast off. Already the interest amounts to the salary of nine men, who might be in the field. It amounts to nearly seven hundred and fifty dollars a month. Think of this curtailment of funds for the enlargement of our missions! Think of how much this means of contracting our field when already the deficit in the Annual Conferences is half of this interest ($4,500)! This interest must be paid even though missionaries may be recalled, or some may not be sent out who are ready. What are we waiting for? It is just as good a time to press this cause as any time during this century. The older the debt, the harder to pay it off. The church will soon get so accustomed to it that it will not worry, or be anxious, or have any conscience on it. Would it be saying too much to intimate that already this debt is taken as a matter of course, and the church is not any longer aroused by the thought, or asks, How shall it be paid? An old debt, how hard to pay! The man loses conscience on it, the creditor has lived so long without it he don't need it, and the transaction has lost all its freshness, and there takes a good deal of real-down honesty and integrity to pay an old debt. The best time to pay a debt is when it is fresh and young, before it gets to be an old song. Our missionary debt is getting to be an old song. It is hardly five years old yet, and everybody is sleeping easy; nobody lying awake over it. The people don't care much, the secretaries and Bishops are very calm and dignified about the matter, and the pastors, they are really too busy with other matters to worry over the missionary debt. It is only five years old. When this debt gets to be ten years old we will have reached a crystallized state. It will be so old that it will take an antiquary to tell how it originated. Some will begin to doubt whether it is just, and we do really owe it. Children will then be grown and know nothing about it, feel not the shadow of interest in it, and it will never be paid.

A new year is on us. Let it be opened with this great work to pay off the debt. Let us have a campaign in the Southern Methodist Church of collections for this debt. Let this be the special: one secretary do nothing else but press this great claim, and from the richest to the poorest member of the church tithe their income and turn it into the Lord's treasury for this holy cause. This can only be accomplished by every pastor, from Bishops to the humblest mountain missionary, taking the lead and tithing their income for this purpose. Your scribe will head the list and tithe his income for the missionary debt. Who else will join this band for 1897? Write to the editor. LYSIAS.

That Resolution.

Members of the Mississippi Conference will recall the fact that at our late session in Port Gibson this writer offered a resolution (which was unanimously adopted) to the effect that at each protracted and camp meeting held in this Conference during the year 1897 that one day be given to fasting and prayer for our foreign mission work, and to preaching on that subject.

I want to say to our preachers and membership that the resolution was not the result of the impulse of the moment, but of a long and prayerful study of the need and the best method of awakening a proper interest in this great work of the church. More than six months ago I determined to offer this resolution, and then to do what I could to make it effective.

I have long felt that our church needs to be brought into closer touch with this great work than the payment of a small assessment for this cause can bring them. What we need, and must have, is the thought and the heart of the church in perfect harmony with our Lord's great commission. And what better means can we employ to accomplish this than that of fasting and prayer? Let each pastor prepare a sermon for the day, and then give his membership an opportunity to express their convictions on the subject in a missionary love-feast.

And do not fear, my brethren, that a day thus spent will be against a revival meeting. I have observed that those churches and individuals most interested in this great work have the strongest faith, and are to be relied upon to do their full duty. Let us, my brethren, fill up the spirit of this resolution during the year, and see what the Holy Spirit will do for us in the churches. J. M. WEEMS.

Correspondence.

The North Mississippi Conference.

MR. EDITOR: I feel inclined to give you some impressions of the session of our Conference which has just closed. All things considered, it was the most gratifying session of an Annual Conference I ever attended. I have attended sessions of the Virginia, Holston and Mississippi, as well as seventeen other sessions of the North Mississippi. The reports of the preachers, as a whole, were the best to which I ever listened. They gladdened my heart. I saw in them the rewards of faithful work on the part of these ambassadors for Christ. The collections were generally up to the assessments; but the work showed other things which are far better than even full collections. There was evidence of growing ministerial strength and efficiency, of profound and tender love for the souls of men, and of the fact that the aggressive power of our system is telling in the development of a robust piety in our laity and of the fruits of liberality. To me the sun of hope shines brighter for the hastening of "that day."

The "Thanksgiving services" on Thursday, the twenty-sixth, were attractive and elevating. They were calculated to intensify our love for this commonwealth and for this great nation, and to heighten our sense of gratitude to God for his goodness to us as a people. Prominent gentlemen of Greenville, who are not Methodists, remarked that Bishop Galloway had shown that he is one of the most broad-minded, liberal and patriotic citizens in all our land, and that nowhere in the United States could there have been on that day an abler exposition of the duties and privileges of enlightened citizenship than was set forth in the admirable address of our gifted and pious Bishop. Thanksgiving Day at our Conference is a gladdening occasion. The spirit in which the business of the Conference was conducted charmed me. All was gentleness, attention to duty, and love.

The visits, addresses and sermons of Dr. Black, of New Orleans; Dr. Palmore, of St. Louis; Drs. J. W. Boswell, W. R. Lambuth and S. A. Steel, of Nashville; Chancellor Kirkland, of Vanderbilt University; Drs. W. C. Johnson and J. V. Taylor, of Memphis, added to the pleasure and profit of the occasion. On the Epworth League night we had interesting addresses by Hon. G. J. Leftwich, Rev. T. W. Lewis, and Dr. Steel.

It seems to me there could have been no more beautiful, impressive and instructive address than that delivered by the presiding Bishop to the young men who were received into full connection. We know now more about holiness, about gentleness in winning souls, about the meaning of diligence in work. Our knees afford longer and broader seats for children. This thought leads me to say that it seems to me we are not as strong and successful in Sunday-school work as in other departments of service. I believe the organization of our schools ought to show numbers at least as great as our church membership. Our members do not study the Word of God diligently and with system. In my humble judgment, this is one of our greatest defects, and one of the greatest hindrances to our rapid progress. Let us get our people, as far as possible, into our Sunday-schools for associated study; and where this is impracticable in any case, let us institute a home department for such study. The great thing is to get our people to brush the dust from their Bibles, and get them well marked by prayerful use. I do hope and pray that our preachers will see to it that we have a strong advance this year in Sunday-schools; not only in numbers, but in the methods and spirit of the study of God's gracious message.

Now, in closing this letter, let me say that we all are under a debt of gratitude to Bro. T. Y. Ramsey for thoughtful arrangements for the Conference, and to the good people of Greenville who entertained us elegantly and generously.

R. W. JONES.

University of Mississippi, Dec. 1, 1896.

"North Mississippi" in the St. Louis Christian Advocate.

In his report of our last Annual Conference to the St. Louis Christian Advocate, of Dec. 9, "North Mississippi" says: "The schools are prospering. Epworth College, though not the property of the church as the other two, is reported as a church school."

If our friends of Grenada are so anxious to keep all of the facts before the public, why did "North Mississippi" not add that the Grenada Collegiate Institute is not the property of the church as Millsaps College is? If Millsaps College makes a dollar, it is made by and for the M. E. Church, South. If it loses a dollar, it is lost by the M. E. Church, South. Not so with the Grenada Collegiate Institute. If it makes a dollar, it is made by and for Dr. Malone. If it loses a dollar, it is his loss.

The church has no more financial interest in the income of the Grenada Collegiate Institute than it has in the income of the Epworth College. The only difference is, the Methodists of Holly Springs furnish their own house in which to serve the church, while the church furnishes, free of rent, the house in which Grenada serves the church. At East Mississippi Female College.

PRESIDENT BEESON ADDS ANOTHER STRONG DEPARTMENT TO HIS INSTITUTION.

The News learns that President Beeson has added another strong department to the East Mississippi Female College, which is a chair of Modern Languages and Greek, and is filled by Miss Carrie W. Carpenter, of North Carolina. Miss Carpenter arrived last night, and will enter upon her duties at once. She has just returned from Europe, where she has finished her second year of post-gradnate work in the languages, which she has made her specialty. Miss Carpenter has won a wide reputation as a teacher in her native State, joining native talent to extended preparation and wide experience.

President Beeson is making a wise step in having specialists in every department. This makes 16 teachers and officers, and over 200 students in the college, and we learn that more boarders are to come after the holidays. This college means much for Meridian.—Meridian Daily News.

Miss Carpenter is a daughter of one of our preachers of the North Carolina Conference, and was once at the head of a Methodist seminary for young ladies in her Conference. One says of her, writing from her native town, "She is one among ten thousand." She is a devout Christian and a good Methodist.

The True Giving.

It is strange that so few people know, or ever come to learn, how little it really costs, measured by the standard of dollars and cents, to make the most acceptable Christmas gift that one human heart can render to another. Year after year we go lamenting that we can not give this one and that one anything, because we have so few pennies to spend that we really couldn't buy them anything they would regard or value. What a shallow estimate of the meaning and worth of a gift! Only the trivial, meagre thing itself considered—the infinite, yearning, loving, sympathetic heart behind it not in evidence at all!

If the soul with the Christmas spirit in it could only realize how other souls, with the Christmas spirit in them, value the gifts of sympathy! Anything that shows that a person loves them, and thinks of them, is dear, is priceless to one's true and sincere friends. In ninety-nine cases out of a hundred it is the forgetting, or seeming to forget, that wounds and disappoints; not the remembering with something whose money value, perhaps, is less than that of the postage stamp that brings it. A penny Christmas card has often carried more joy to the heart of one who loves you than the costliest gift that comes to him merely as a matter of exchange.

The true gift, after all, is simply an expression of the heart. If the heart speaks through it, that is enough. That is the essential thing. People who neglect their dear ones because they think the gift should always equal the feeling that prompts it, are blind to the true meaning of giving. All that love asks is remembrance. Any little token of sympathy carries with it all that the truly loving spirit longs for. Give, then, out of the heart, and know that, whatever the gift may be, you have realized the true meaning of Christmas.—Zion's Herald.

SWEET BELLS OF CHRISTMASTIDE.

Christmas bells, chime out triumphant
Over land and over sea!
Send your happy tidings floating
On sweet waves of melody;
Softly tell your tender story,
O'er and o'er and o'er again,
"Glory in the highest, glory;
Peace on earth, good-will to men."

To some doubting, weary spirit,
Bring a gentle, holy calm;
May your notes, on hearts sore-wounded,
Fall like consecrated balm.
To some life a storm-troubled waters
May they whisper, Peace, be still!
And our sleeping souls awaken
With a glad, exultant thrill.

On your wings of music, sweet bells,
Bear our thoughts to Him above;
Teach our hearts to time their praises
To the rapturous psalm of love.
Oh! ring out all strife and malice
With the story of His birth;
Ring in Faith, and Hope, and Love,
And peace on earth!

A Wise Reply.

MR. EDITOR: I have just read the following in The World for Christ, and it is so full of truth that I ask you to reproduce it in the ADVOCATE, believing that many who do not take The World for Christ will see and read it. The same clever impostors who caused so much trouble in the New England States then have recently created some excitement in more than one of our Southern States. Would that they could be met everywhere in the same manner and spirit as manifested by this pious Indian. Much evil might be thwarted. GEO. W. HIVELY.

Long years ago, when the Mormon excitement prevailed in the New England States and Canada, a Mormon preacher came to the bay of Quiate County, in the Province of Ontario, and held a series of meetings with the object of making proselytes for the Western Mormon country. Shortly before this a number of Indians had become Christians, and hearing of these Mormon services, but not knowing their character, some of them attended. Great was their sorrow at hearing the Bible which they had learned to love so belittled and despised, and the Book of Mormon, which he said had been dug out of the ground, highly extolled above it.

When the Mormon had finished his discourse about the book he gave permission for any of the congregation to say anything they desired about what he had said. All sat still, and as no white man was found brave enough to get up and defend the old book, John Sunday at length arose and asked if an Indian might speak. The desired permission having been given by the Mormon, the pious Indian replied as follows: "A great many winters ago the Great Spirit gave his good book, the Bible, to the white man over the waters. He took it and read it, and it made his heart all over very glad. By and by white man came over to this country and brought the good book with him. He gave it to poor Indian. He hear it and understand it, and it make his heart very glad too. But when the Great Spirit gave his good book to the white man the evil spirit, the Muche-Maneto, try to make a book, too, and he try to make it like the Great Spirit made his, but he could not, and then he got so ashamed of that he go in the woods and dig a hole in the ground, and there he hide his book. After lying there for many winters Joe Smith go dig it up. This is the book this preacher has been talking about. I hold fast to the good old Bible, which has made my heart so happy. I will have nothing to do with the devil's book."

This quaint speech ended that Mormon's career in that neighborhood. Would that in other lands and places there had risen up true men like this brave John Sunday to silence and stamp out the pestilent impostors who have done so much evil in this American continent!—Edgerton R. Young, in "Indian Wigwams and Northern Camp Fires."

The Statistical Craze.

MR. EDITOR: I have read with interest and profit the article on first page of our ADVOCATE, of Dec. 10, written by Bishop Haygood, headed, "The Statistical Craze." It is entitled to a careful and prayerful reading on the part of both preachers and laymen. Men are too often estimated by the "quantity," and not the "quality" of the work they do. Too many half-awakened people are gathered into the church by some of our so-called "revivalists," who only serve to help clog the wheels of our beloved Zion rather than help farther the interest of the good cause. Plain, practical, earnest, heart-searching, soul-stirring sermons, delivered by holy men of God, are not always listened to and appreciated by the masses; yet that is the kind of preaching we need.

Preaching that makes the "sinners in Zion" uneasy and restless until they either withdraw from the church, or get a good case of "old-time religion," is in demand, so it seems to me. Preachers who cry "Peace, peace, when there is no peace," are often more popular with the masses than the humble, faithful men of God who, when he sees danger ahead, does not fail to "cry aloud and spare not."

Let all our people hunt up their ADVOCATE of the tenth instant, turn to the first page, and read or re-read Bishop Haygood's article. It will do them good. H. P. LEWIS.

In Memoriam.

Emma Holcombe Keener was born in Tuskaloosa, Feb. 2, 1846; died in Carrollton, La.

Our dear child had been dying for the past five years. For three years she had been helpless as an infant. When sixteen years old she was thrown by a pony, while returning from school, against an oak tree. From this accident she was partially paralyzed all her life—and at last died. During all the time she was a most uncomplaining sufferer.

At twelve years of age she was converted at Felicity Street Church. She found her greatest pleasure in the Sunday-school and in the services of the house of God. Generous, unselfish, transparent, uncompromising in her spiritual life, she was foremost in aiding all the enterprises of the church and in the support of her pastors. She gave away all she had, and all she could collect from others, in doing good. She had no enemies, and she was everybody's friend. Her face expressed the cheerfulness and openness of her heart, ever bright as the morning; she lived to help others. Her Bible, her birds, her flowers and her friends consisted the Eden in which she dwelt. She knew no such thing as doubt; not the least fleck of it ever crossed her sky. The Savior, her parents, brothers and sisters were equally objects of her supreme affection. She died peacefully. After a stormy voyage she rounded the cape and glided into the haven of eternal life. She "died in the Lord," and her memory is "blessed."

Mellen, Wesson, Miss., $1. Also a good cash collection at Conference. The names of the givers I do not know, but their names are recorded above. Many thanks to all that gave, and an earnest prayer for the richest blessings of our kind heavenly Father to rest upon them all. And now, when all is in that is promised, I will only lack $10.05—ten dollars and five cents of having enough to pay for the land. Who will help pay that? You do not know how much relief I feel at being so near out of debt on the land. "Bless the Lord, O my soul!"

The Board of Missions reappointed me agent to raise more money. We want to raise $400 this year, if possible—some to pay the missionary; and we want to buy some more land. We ought to have at least one thousand acres, and then we could get them all together and manage them so much better; but we only ask for the $10.05 now.

Please send as before, postoffice order on Hermanville, Miss., or registered letter to me at Hermanville. A. D. MILLER.

Grenada Collegiate Institute.

THE PROPERTY OF THE NORTH MISSISSIPPI CONFERENCE.

The college building, which is an imposing four-story structure of brick, was erected in 1861 at a cost of over $40,000, Mr. John Moore being the contractor to do the building. It is one of the most substantial buildings in the State. It was built by the Baptists, and Rev. Mr. Webb was president of the first school conducted there. He was succeeded by Rev. Granberry. Under the management of those gentlemen, the college was in a flourishing condition, there being at one time more than one hundred boarding pupils.

As was the case with most of the institutions of learning in the South, the progress of this one was arrested by the coming on of the war. In 1862 the Confederate government took possession of the building, and converted it into an arsenal, and afterwards used it as a hospital. Thus the echoes of youthful mirth and childish exuberance flitted away from those sacred walls, frightened by the approach of the groans and moans of the weary, wounded soldier.

After the war the building was purchased by Mr. Geo. Ragsdale and put in excellent repair at an expense of several thousand dollars. Mr. Ragsdale sold it to a stock company composed of Gen. E. C. Walthall, Capt. John Powell, Lake Bros., G. W. Jones, and others. These gentlemen leased the property to Rev. D. D. Moore, and afterwards to a Mr. Weir, both of whom conducted schools there.

In 1881 it was deeded to the Methodists of the North Mississippi Conference, and Rev. T. J. Newell was appointed president of the school. He managed it very successfully until 1893. At the expiration of his time Mr. Newell was succeeded by Rev. J. W. Malone, a gentleman of recognized ability and exalted Christian character. With Rev. J. W. Malone as president and Rev. Mr. McIntosh as financial agent, the Grenada Collegiate Institute has entered upon an era of prosperity which promises to make it one of the foremost colleges in the State. Rev. Mr. McIntosh is one of the most successful revivalists in the South, all of which is owing to his entire consecration to the service of his Master. His services to the Grenada Collegiate Institute are invaluable.

Within the last three years under the present management this institution has made unprecedented advances. The corps of teachers is unexcelled by that of any similar institution in the State.

The Music Department is in charge of several ladies who have studied at the most noted conservatories in the United States. Miss Damon, the art teacher, is considered one of the finest in the South.

The Department of Modern Languages is presided over by Miss Burgis, who has spent some time in Germany under the instruction of prominent German professors.

Mrs. Hargrove, who has charge of the Department of Mathematics, took a special course in mathematics at the University of Mississippi in order to better fit herself for such a position. In addition to her other high qualifications for a teacher, she is a most devout Christian.

The Departments of Modern Languages, Art and Elocution are unsurpassed in the South.

While the main object is to train the intellects of the young ladies, their moral training is considered of much importance, and the teachers keep this prominently before them.

All these advantages have attracted such a number of students that the college this term is taxed almost beyond its capacity to entertain the boarders. The number is double that of any previous year, reaching as high as 87. The orchestra numbers over 20, and will require the attention of two teachers before the term is out.

Enlarged capacity and more facilities are needed to meet the increasing demands of the college. The reappointment of Rev. Mr. McIntosh to the financial agency at the recent session of the North Mississippi Conference insures increased facilities and more room for boarders. Pupils who may desire to enter the Boarding Department for the Spring session, which begins Jan. 18, 1897, should write at once to the president. Only a limited number can be received.

Subjects for the Week of Prayer.

FOR THE WOMAN'S PARSONAGE AND HOME MISSION SOCIETY.

In the program for the Week of Prayer, certain subjects relative to the work of the Parsonage and Home Mission Society are called for. Information on these subjects may be found in the January and February number of Our Homes, the organ of the society. In the February number will be found also readings that may be used for the Week of Prayer.

To any auxiliary where Our Homes is not taken, or to any place or society wishing to join us in observing this Week of Prayer—held for our own country—I will gladly send free one copy of each of these numbers of the paper. However, as the number of each issue of the paper must, necessarily, be limited, those places wishing to make sure of getting these papers, had best send at least one subscription to the paper at the earliest date possible, that the number of copies printed may be commensurate with the demand.

Our Week of Prayer is held the first week in February, because in that week the Wesleys first came to America seeking to evangelize this country. It seems to us but fitting that all Southern Methodism should unite with the Parsonage and Home Mission Society in the observance of this week of prayer, and in holding up before the throne of grace our own country for the salvation of which we should plead. Does it not need our united prayers? Has not God promised much to united prayer? Will you not join us, and hope that the special mercies of God may come upon us?

Programs for the Week of Prayer may be secured from the Conference secretaries of the Parsonage and Home Mission Society, or from the general secretary, Mrs. R. K. Hargrove, West Nashville, Tenn.

Our Homes is fifty cents a year. To subscribe for it, or to ask a free copy of the numbers mentioned, write to

MISS LUCINDA B. HELM,
Editor, Nashville, Tenn.

The Woman's Parsonage and Home Mission Society of the North Mississippi Conference held its fifth annual session in Oxford, Oct. 24 to 27. In the absence of the president, Mrs. J. B. Stone (hindered from meeting with us by serious illness of her daughter), Mrs. Logan Walker, vice-president, presided. We had a good meeting, and encouraging reports from some of the auxiliaries, while some lagged and some were silent. Macon and Winona overpaid their pledge for the S. Myra Smith Scholarship in the Bible and Training-school. Each pledged $50. Macon paid $60, and Winona $54. An appropriation of $75 was promised to Potts' Camp.

The suggestion of a "thank-box" was received with favor, and it is hoped that our women and children will provide themselves with them, and not forget the many things to be thankful for.

As a rule, those auxiliaries that reported the largest number of subscribers to "Our Homes" had the best financial report.

The Baby Roll grew during the year, as published in NEW ORLEANS ADVOCATE, and grew still longer on Tuesday of the meeting, when the following names were added: Parker Clare Tubb, Bessie Mary Mayfield, Paul Williams, Nellie York, from Amory Auxiliary; Vivian Sanders, William Kennedy Hinds, Annie Fay Hinds, Elizabeth Phillips, Boonville Auxiliary; Bessie Sullivan, Mary Ethel Kershaw, Agnes Adams Kershaw, William Moody Dorman, Oxford Auxiliary; James Montgomery Gardner, Cleveland Auxiliary; William James Veazey, Coldwater Auxiliary; James Wall Taylor, James Hill, Potts' Camp Auxiliary; Victor Granberry Clifford, Harris Inman Phillips Clifford, Water Valley Auxiliary; Mary Sweatman Webster, Winona Auxiliary; Windham Oliver, Hebron Auxiliary; Clifford Buckley, Carrollton Auxiliary; Joe Moody, Byhalia Auxiliary.

The following officers were elected: President, Mrs. J. B. Stone; first vice-president, Mrs. Logan Walker; second vice-president, Mrs. A. B. Finlay; corresponding secretary, Mrs. J. S. Featherstun; recording secretary, Mrs. C. E. Cogdell; treasurer, Mrs. Rowan Thayer; auditor, Mrs. J. R. Bew; editor, Mrs. H. W. Foote.

District secretaries: Grenada, Mrs. M. S. Collier; Columbus, Mrs. W. W. Magruder; Winona, Miss Mary Sweatman; Greenville, Mrs. George B. Sholby; Sardis, Mrs. C. G. Callicut; Aberdeen, Miss Eula Laughridge; Holly Springs, Miss Lucy Matthews; Durant, Mrs. J. C. Park; Coriath, Mrs. J. R. Thrasher.

Oxford entertained us in the very best style. Mrs. J. W. T. Falkner bade us welcome. Miss Etta Murry, of Ripley, responded for us. We received with pleasure the well-worded greetings from the Presbyterian Church by Mrs. D. L. Sultan, the Cumberland Presbyterian Church by Mrs. J. C. Gates, and from our own Woman's Foreign Missionary Society by Mrs. W. M. McIntosh.

The music was good, appropriate, and appreciated. The recitations by Misses Dora Wyche, Belle Sullivan and Virginia Jones were enjoyed by all.

After the meeting adjourned we went in a body, by invitation of Chancellor Fuller, to the university. The drive to and from was delightful, thanks to the kind people of Oxford; and we will ever remember the courtesies shown us by the chancellor and Dr. Johnson, who kindly led the way and explained to us many things of interest. We were glad indeed to have the opportunity to visit that seat of learning under such favorable circumstances.

Let us try during this year to improve on all lines of our work, and be ready for a good report and a good meeting at Cleveland next October. CARRIE E. COGDELL, Recording Secretary.

The first annual District Conference of the W. F. M. S. of the Opelousas district convened at New Iberia, in the M. E. Church, South, on Nov. 14, at 3:30 P. M. Mrs. Faunt LeRoy conducted the opening exercises of the meeting. Mrs. Notestine presided at the organ. Bro. Notestine led in prayer. Bro. Notestine gave us a few words of welcome, which were responded to by Mrs. Hayes.

The Conference was formally opened for business, Mrs. Hayes occupying the chair, and Mrs. Faunt LeRoy acting as secretary. A very interesting letter was read from the president of our Conference society, Mrs. Fullilove. Our hearts were warmed by her glowing words, and all felt renewed zeal to go forth and work for the Master. Five auxiliaries were represented. Crowley is the banner society, as they report having remitted up to date a total of $38. The Opelousas auxiliary report having forwarded $40.50; also a barrel has been sent to Rev. J. J. Methvin's institute in Oklahoma Territory. A box is being filled by them for Christmas for the "Whosoever Will Mission" in New Orleans.

Our place of meeting, New Iberia, a thriving city of six thousand inhabitants, situated on the classical Teche, is in the midst of a prosperous country, judging from the railroad traffic, the numerous saw mills and sugar refineries that surround it. The Opelousas district extends from the blue waters that lap the shore of Morgan City to where the stately pines of Calcasieu make cathedral towers above the Sabine.

Not one, perhaps, is unfamiliar with the beautiful story of Evangeline, which is whispered by every breeze that stirs the branches of the grand oaks that shadow the banks of the Teche.

Our church at New Iberia is stately. The pastor, Bro. Notestine, and wife are much beloved by their people. We feel that our first Conference is a beginning of better things on this district. Mrs. Notestine, Mrs. Faunt LeRoy and Mrs. Hayes were appointed a committee to prepare a program for our next annual meeting, to be held in Opelousas.

On Sunday, Bro. Faunt LeRoy preached a grand missionary sermon from Jonah iii, 2. He also preached at night, and at the close of the services a missionary collection was taken amounting to $3.85, to be used in helping to furnish the "Fullilove-Foster" room in the "Scarritt Bible and Training-School" at Kansas City. We are working to bring up our pro rata in the 100,000 membership and the $100,000.

Selections.

Christmas is essentially a heart festival. It is a time not only for recalling the birth of Bethlehem's Babe, but for dwelling upon the wonderful significance of the incarnation. "God manifest in the flesh," is the way the apostle puts it. What a condescension that God should stoop to earth and assume a human form and become partaker of our nature! . . . . The infinite condescension!—think of it, bereaved one, who misses a familiar voice and a vanished hand at the Christmas table. He took the beloved one, but not for one moment has he forgotten you; he will come in and be your Christmas guest if you will permit him. Think of it, aged one with bent form and dimmed eyes looking towards sunset; he knows your weakness, he sees your failing strength; lean upon him and find him your perfect strength. The infinite condescension! think of it, young man and young maiden; ponder it, old, and middle-aged, and young! Let us all appreciate the lesson—the lesson of humility and self-abnegation and trust. Let us learn to sink self in the work before us; to work unfalteringly along the line marked for us, seeking not our own, but what is God's; we have but to do, and leave results with him.—Christian Work.

No room for Him in the inn! How is it with you and me, this year of our Lord? Is there a place for him in those hearts of ours? Are we letting him be crowded out, either by the deceitfulness of riches, the solicitudes of poverty, or the cumbering cares of business?—Margaret E. Sangster.

A leader of fashion in Vienna came out in a cheap hat. At once cheap and simple straw hats became all the rage, and the millinors' trade was in danger. What did the milliners do? They bought up a lot of straw hats of the cheap, simple style so fashionable, and gave them away to poor girls! That did the business.—Golden Rule.

To Whom It May Concern:

About three years ago I received a sample bottle of "Mul-en-ol." I had never heard of it before. I began using it, however, as occasion required, and soon found that it was all that is claimed for it, and more. For cuts, burns, bruises, scalds, and all kinds of sores, it is superior to any remedy I have ever used. It is also exceedingly efficacious in colic and diarrhœa. For sore throat it is incomparably better than anything I know of. I heartily recommend it as a medicine worthy of a place in every household. W. C. Black,

From the Work.

PLEASANTON, TEX.

As I am still a subscriber of your paper, and feel the same interest in the brethren of the North Mississippi Conference as I did while within its bounds, and believing they have the same interest in me, I assume the liberty of asking for a short space in your columns for a letter.

I was returned to the Pleasanton circuit, which is the banner circuit of the West Texas Conference. I went up to Conference with the best report I have ever carried; all of the assessments paid in full, besides two extra collections—one for improvement on home parsonage, amounting to $270, and one for district parsonages for $75; adding to this a revival at each charge, resulting in 65 conversions an 56 additions to our church. Last year was indeed the best year of my life in every way. I believe that a good, substantial circuit of four appointments is really the biggest thing in Methodism. Why, Doctor, I would not exchange places with you as editor, or with one of our presiding elders whether their districts are enlarged or diminished—yea, not even with a Bishop; and I will tell you why: because I am not an editor, a presiding elder or a Bishop; therefore I am filling the place where I belong, and I have no aspiration for anything above me in a temporal sense.

Dr. Barbee made a remark while preaching a sermon at Conference that impressed me very forcibly. He said, "You talk about sanctified ambition; you might as well talk about a sanctified devil." I believe that the highest merit or aim of a minister of the gospel should be to do what his hand finds to do with the very best of his ability, or attend to that duty which lies next to him with all his might, remembering the fact that Christ made himself of no reputation—that is, in a temporal sense. Dr. Barbee quoted a statement made by a colored Bishop at Nashville, which he thought contained as much truth in it as any statement that he had ever heard from any Bishop. He said, just before reading the appointments, the colored Bishop said: "Now, all you preachers want me to send you to the first church at Nashville;" but he says, "I can not do it. The fact is, I can not send you anywhere. You send yourself. Your talent and ability must create a demand for you, and I simply pass judgment upon your fitness for the place." So I came home determined to try to create a demand for myself on circuits consisting of four appointments, as I think it is the biggest thing in Methodism, by making this year the very best year of my life. This Western Texas, I imagine, is more like the Holy Land than any country that I have seen. The live oaks here spread sufficiently by thrusting out bare limbs to cover one-eighth of an acre of land, and they will not be more than 20 or 30 feet tall. Some of these trees will make you bow your head to ride under them on horseback, and the branches from these large limbs are very rough and knotty—just such a tree I suppose caught Absalom by the hair and suspended him in mid-air as he was fleeing before the enemy. The flowers that Christ made talk to us, the mounts so often referred to, and David's statement, "The heavens declare the glory of God;" the shepherds watching their flocks by night in December, and the drouths that were sent, are all applicable to this country and climate. But, notwithstanding the ravages of the insects here and the drouths, a man can make a living here easier than any place that I have seen. Everything grows with very little cultivation. One man can work fifty acres easily. People are constantly moving here attracted by this climate and country. Our Conference was crowded with transfers the last session. Protestantism has a firm foothold here, and will soon take possession of Mexico. May God speed the day!

With many wishes for my many friends and brethren of the North Mississippi Conference, that you may have a joyous Christmas and a prosperous year, I am, as ever,

Yours in Christ,
C. W. Perkins.

REVIVAL AT ADAM'S CHAPEL.

While in DeSoto arrangements were made to hold a week's meeting at Adam's Chapel. It is a new, beautiful country church, located between Quitman and Pachuta, in a prosperous community. The religious elements seem about equally divided between the Methodist and Baptist Churches, denominational lines being closely drawn, and a spirit of separation between the two churches very manifest. Reports of an exaggerated character had gone before, and a decided spirit of opposition to the supposed teaching on sanctification had formulated. But from the first the people came in from every quarter. The power of the Lord was present; the truth of the doctrine and experience of entire sanctification as taught in the Holy Scriptures and the doctrinal standards of the Methodist Church was accepted, and in one week about one hundred and twenty were rejoicing in the conscious assurance of salvation and sanctification.

The last day was the great day of the feast. It was Thursday, Nov. 26, our national Thanksgiving Day. It was opened at 10:30 A. M. with a praise meeting, followed by a sermon on serving God in the right use of our means from Mal. iii, 10, and I. Cor. xvi, 1, 2 The Lord owned the Word, and about twenty-five souls were either converted or sanctified. The meeting continued until quite late in the afternoon. The evening service was on the same sustained interest, continuing up to about 11 P. M. The total number saved in the two services being not less than forty.

Many who at the beginning of the meeting were cold and indifferent were revived and quickened, and many who were active in opposition to the teaching of entire sanctification, as held by the Methodist Church, as an experience of purification of the heart received by faith subsequent to conversion, were joyful witnesses to the experience.

SALEM MEETING.

This is another beautiful new church-house in a strong community about four miles from DeSoto. We began Saturday, Nov. 28, at 7:30 P. M. It was a dark, cold evening, and cold rain had been falling up to a late hour. Ordinarily no one would have thought of holding a meeting such a night; but we had promised to be there and begin a protracted meeting. Only a few were on hand, but the Lord was with us. Sunday following was so very severe that no one ventured out during the whole day. But Monday, at 11 A. M., quite a number were present, and it was agreed that we would continue the meeting even with discouraging weather. Up to Tuesday night we occupied the schoolhouse near by, as there was no stove in the church; but friends arranged to remove the stove to the church, so we were favored with a larger and much more comfortable place of meeting. Soon the large church was full, and many found the Lord in both the experience of conversion and entire sanctification. The total number was estimated at not less than one hundred—about equally divided—many, however, were both converted and afterwards were sanctified. The testimonies to the two experiences were exceedingly clear. The meeting closed Friday night with a packed house, a crowded altar, and many rejoicing Christians We begin at Pachuta, Miss., Dec. 6

"Thanks be to God who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

Resolutions adopted by the fourth Quarterly Conference of the St. Helena circuit, Baton Rouge district, Louisiana Conference, assembled at Darlington Church, Nov. 22, 1896:

Whereas, The appointing power of our church has seen proper to send the Rev. N. J. Roberts to serve us for the past four years; And, whereas, He has, by his faithful and efficient labors with us during these years built up our churches, both spiritually and financially, being largely instrumental in the founding of the Johnston Collegiate Institute, and solely instrumental in the building of a new church in an undeveloped community; therefore, be it

Resolved, By this Quarterly Conference that we express our high appreciation of his untiring efforts to lead us and our people into the paths of righteousness and the ways of holiness; and that while we willingly submit to the law of our church, which forbids his staying longer with us, yet we deeply regret that it becomes necessary for us to sever the sacred and holy relations that exist between us as pastor and people. Furthermore, we wish to express our brotherly love for him and his family, and our desire that wherever he may be sent next year he may find true and loving friends who will minister to his wants and serve with him in building up the holy religion of the Cross. To those among whom his lot may be cast, we commend him as a wise, faithful, and efficient pastor, a true, earnest, and devoted friend, and an exemplary Christian gentleman.

Resolved, By this Conference, that we express our hearty appreciation of the efficient services rendered us by our beloved presiding elder, the Rev. R. W. Tucker, and that we express our desire that he may be returned to keep watch over us another year.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be furnished the New Orleans Christian Advocate and also the St. Helena Echo for publication.

A bride is always interesting. When a woman becomes a bride she is making one of the great changes in life. She is entering on duties entirely new to her—duties, which she is all too often wholly unfitted and unprepared for. It is a woman's duty, as well to herself as to her husband, that she shall be strongly healthy in every way—particularly in those organs which are to be called into play in bringing children into the world. Weakness and disease of the organs distinctively feminine undoubtedly cause much of the misery, unhappiness and incompatibility of married life. A woman whose nerves are continually nagged with torturing pains, whose vitality is low, and whose strength is unequal to her daily tasks does not find it possible to be always amiable and cheerful. And yet, amiability, cheerfulness, good looks and vivacity are the things most expected by a husband. Every woman may have these things if she will make and keep herself strong and healthy. The way is simple. It leads to Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, the preparation of a regularly graduated, experienced and skilled specialist in the treatment of the diseases of women, who has for thirty years been chief consulting physician of the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, at Buffalo, N. Y. For thirty years this preparation has been marvelously successful—has been the means of bringing happiness into thousands of homes. Its most benign influence is in eliminating the pains and dangers of childbirth. Its benefit in this respect cannot be overestimated.

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets permanently cure constipation, sick and bilious headaches, biliousness, heart-burn, sour stomach, foul breath, palpitation of the heart, and flatulence.

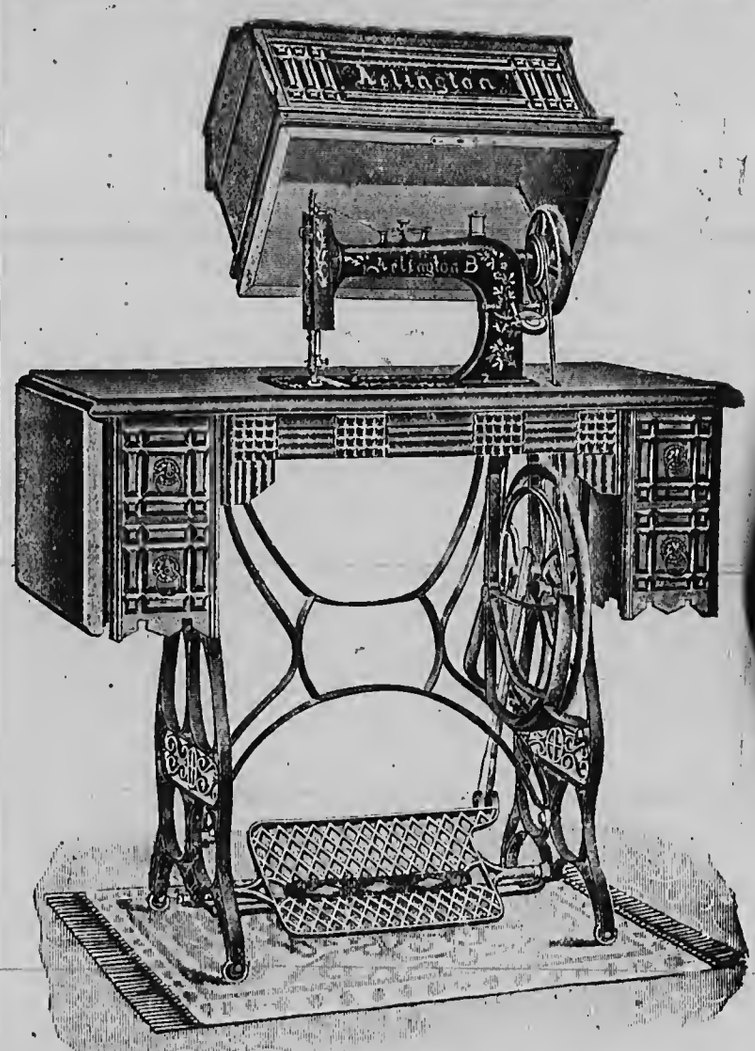
Our Machine Offer.

New Improved High-Arm "Arlington B" Self-Threading Sewing Machine.



A recorded certificate of warranty for 10 years accompanies each machine. The "Arlington B" is complete in every detail, combining all modern and late improvements, such as automatic bobbin winder, self-threading shuttle, self-setting needle, upper spring tension, etc.

The "Arlington B" self-threading sewing machine has a large high-arm, its mechanical appearance is perfect, its adjustment is absolute, positive take up, convenient foot-rest, with the best style furniture, either oak or walnut; in addition to which each machine is furnished with the best steel combination attachments free, as follows: One tucker, one foot ruffler, one set of plain hemmers (five different widths up to seven-eighths of an inch), one binder, one shirring plate and one under-braider, packed in a handsome velvet lined case. It is also furnished with one foot hemmer, one screw driver, one wrench, one oil can with oil, one gauge, one package of needles, six bobbins and one instruction book.

The Head is strong and substantial; has large space under the arm for handling bulky goods, is finely japanned, and protected by a hard finish. Has so few bearings and friction points that it is easily oiled and kept clean.

Needle Bar is round, with adjustable bearings polished and fitted, insuring great wear, and can run a long time without oiling. It has a slack dip motion, relieving the strain upon the thread when the shuttle is passing through the loop. Using the adjustable take-up, controlling the threads perfectly on all grades of work.

Improved Automatic Bobbin Winder which is so positive and reliable in its action that an imperfectly wound bobbin is an impossibility. So simple that a child can easily operate it. This valuable attachment renders possible a perfect control of shuttle tension.

Self-Threading—The "Arlington B" is self-threading, requiring no change from light to heavy work. Uses double thread, and makes the lock stitch.

The Needle is the same as used on the New Home machine, and is self-setting both as to height and position with reference to shuttle, with short blade and long shank, insuring great strength; finely polished.

Self-Threading Shuttle—A perfect steel cylinder shuttle with delicate and perfect tension, open at one end to allow the bobbin to be inserted without displacing any of the parts; runs loose in the shell without spring centre or point bearings, thus insuring an even tension; can be threaded in the dark, and easily understood.

Loose Pulley for winding the bobbin without running the machine requires no change or adjustment, nor is it necessary to remove the work from the machine.

Parts Subject to Wear are made of the finest steel, case hardened, light and noiseless, and are very durable.

OUR OFFER.

To anyone, not now a subscriber to this paper, who will send us $20.50, we will send the machine and the New Orleans Advocate one year. To old subscribers we make the following offer: Pay your subscription to April, '98, and send us $18.50 additional, and we will send you the machine.

Not professions, but deeds are the true test of friendship.

Great duties are usually easier to perform than small ones.

Let your life show day by day that you have companionship with Jesus.

To return injury for injury is manlike; to return good for evil is Godlike.

Man's way is to forgive, but not forget; God's way is to forgive and forget.

The devil may tempt you, but he can not vanquish you without your consent.

In order to be God-like we must both hate the wrong and love the right. This is not saying that we should hate the wrong-doer.

What the Bible brings to you depends in a large measure on what you bring to it. You may have a crumb, or a loaf, or a granary full to bursting, just as you choose.—Dr. Behrends.

Don't worry over the distant future. The future near at hand, "the little inch," just before you is what needs your present attention. The distant bugaboo may disappear before you get near it.

Do not make your past spiritual attainments a yard-stick by which to measure the possibilities of the future. If you put yourself in touch with the agencies of grace, God has better things in store for you than your imagination has ever conceived of.

The religion of some people consists in getting all they can from God without giving him anything in return. A poor sort of religion. The true spirit is that manifested by the Psalmist: "What shall I render to the Lord for all his benefits to me?"

Christianity wants nothing so much in the world as sunny people, and the old are hungrier for love than for bread, and the oil of joy is very cheap, and if you can help the poor on with a garment of praise, it will be better for them than blankets.—Selected.

Deceased Friendships.

Mournful as is the task of burying a dear friend, is it not still more sad to perform the rites of sepulture for a deceased friendship? Over the grave of your loved one you may sing of a resurrection morn ushering in a blissful reunion that shall be as endless as eternity; but when the friend you loved and trusted has been transformed into a foe, or has ceased to regard you otherwise than with supreme indifference, then Hope loses her power of song, while grim Despair croaks "Alas! alas!" as the only fitting requiem. What epitaph inscribed on marble or granite is so full of pathos as are these which the heart writes in its own most sacred recesses in memory of friendships that have perished forever?

Morrison's Suspension and Defiance.

The last issue of The Methodist (Kentucky) contains "An Open Letter to the Holiness People," written by the editor, Rev. H. C. Morrison. In it he refers to the complaints from Texas, presented to his Quarterly Conference in Kentucky, of his suspension pending the final determination of the case, and then announces his purpose to defy the church court. And all this he will do for conscience sake! He says: "I can no more agree to stop proclaiming God's Word for thirty days than Daniel could agree to stop his prayers for that length of time"—and adds, that he will go ahead "regardless of all opposition." In other words, he will violate his solemn ordination vows, put contempt upon the law he sacredly promised to obey, snap his fingers in the face of the church, make a final fling at two of our Chief Pastors, and then piously (?) exclaim, "I praise God that I am fully saved to-day, and there is not a man who walks the earth that I do not love." Who doubts it?

A statement of the whole case will help to a better understanding of his present defiance. Mr. Morrison went into a certain pastoral charge in Texas for the purpose of conducting a meeting. The pastor and presiding elder of the district, on whom had been placed the spiritual care of that people and the control of all the services of the charge, were present on his arrival and advised against the meeting. They, as honest ministers of the church of Christ, thought that such a meeting as was proposed, and under such auspices, would not be helpful to the cause of God. If such was their candid and prayerful judgment, as pastors of the flock of Christ, they were in duty bound so to declare. A failure or refusal so to do would have been infidelity to sacred obligation, and a plain violation of specific law. That their judgment may have been at fault—that they were mistaken as to the results—in no wise affects their attitude. They were to exercise their best judgment, with prayer for divine guidance. Now, the visiting brother persists and declares his purpose to disregard the judgment and wishes of both the pastor and presiding elder. They urge, but he is unyielding. They then call his attention to the law which imposes on them the responsibility of controlling all services in that charge, but he is defiant and goes ahead. They then draw up formal complaints against him for invading that pastoral charge over the protest of both pastor and presiding elder, and in violation of church law, and notifying him of the same, forwarded said complaints to his Quarterly Conference at Lexington, Ky. A Committee of Investigation having been appointed, a trial deemed necessary, and a bill of charges and specifications having been prepared, the presiding elder notified Mr. Morrison, under paragraph 284, of his suspension "until the case has been determined by the Quarterly Conference."

On receipt of that notification Mr. Morrison writes this "Open Letter," and proclaims his purpose to disregard his suspension. Now, upon this state of the case we submit a few observations:

1. The pastor of that circuit and the presiding elder of that district were under most sacred obligation to advise, or, if necessary, protest against any service that they thought not spiritually helpful to their people. Charged with their spiritual supervision and pastoral care, they would have sinned against their high commission, and the letter of the law they had vowed to obey, had they not done so. Their protest, therefore, was not an impertinence, but a solemn duty. They had been adjudged by the Annual Conference competent for such a trust, and the Discipline of the church had been placed in their hands to guide them in the discharge of their duties. Their judgment in the administration of a pastorate is original and final, unless reviewed and overruled by the Annual Conference on a complaint of maladministration.

2. Mr. Morrison, as a local preacher of the M. E. Church, South, had no right to invade a pastoral charge and conduct a meeting over the protest of the pastor and presiding elder. By his solemn ordination vows he was bound to be obedient to their "godly judgments." He might disagree with them in opinion; but, so long as he has the vows of a Methodist preacher upon him, and they have the authority and responsibility of Methodist pastors, he can not disregard their judgment and override their pretest in such matters without violating church law and disturbing the peace of our Zion.

This question was propounded to Mr. Morrison before his ordination: "Will you reverently obey them to whom the charge and government over you is committed, following with a glad mind and will their godly judgments?"

And he answered, "I will endeavor so to do, the Lord being my helper."

Now, with this vow upon him, Mr. Morrison goes into a pastorate, the charge and government of which have been committed to a certain pastor and presiding elder. While there, and especially on a mission to preach the gospel as a Methodist minister, he is pledged to be obedient to their "godly admonitions." Certainly he hasn't promised the church to defy their authority, or encourage the people so to do. He assumes, however, to know better than they what is needful for the church in their charge, sets them aside as unfit guardians and feeders of the flock of Christ, and proceeds to give them "food convenient" according to his own private recipe. How long could any church stand that tolerates such defiance!

3. Mr. Morrison, in his defiant declaration to disregard his legal suspension, assumes final jurisdiction of his case, and withdraws his solemn promise of obedience to the Discipline of his church. One would suppose that any minister with a sensitive regard for his vows, if suspected of infidelity to them at any point, would be glad to be corrected if in error, or fully vindicated if right. He would, therefore, have such reverence for the law he had vowed to obey, and such respect for the church of which he is a minister, as to seek a thorough investigation and vindication. But this brother seems to recognize a higher law than the payment of church vows—that there is a conscience that would be compromised by a conscientious regard for a church authority he has promised to support. What a psychological anomaly that must be—one higher law of conscience superseding or suspending another! He says: "I have neither the time to waste nor the money to spare looking after the matter." We know ministers who have such tender regard for their ordination vows and church obligations as to count no hour wasted that is spent in seeking their perfect vindication of suspected wrong or error. But Mr. Morrison has a different view. We desire to ask a question just here that goes to the very foundation of character: Can a man plead the law of conscience for a course of conduct that necessitates the violation of other promises he has conscientiously taken? Is conscience divided? Must he not be absolved from the one before he can plead the other? When, therefore, a brother declares his defiance of his church courts, when his ministerial character is called in question, because of a higher law that will not allow him to respect them, he is trifling with moral distinctions in a way that must inevitably lead to peril.

4. Mr. Morrison's "Open Letter" contains a suggestion that must shock the high moral sense of every true minister of Christ. He says: "I should think the best way would be to clear me of the Texas charges and then expel me from the ministry for exercising the office while under suspension." It is to be hoped that the brother who so boastfully exclaims, "I am fully saved to-day," did not carefully weigh his words in the above suggestion. Subjected to a perfectly fair analysis his suggestion means this: (1) The court has been organized not to vindicate law, but to get rid of him. (2) That for all the purposes intended, they may acquit him, as he will give ample opportunity, because of another offense he proposes to commit. (3) That the Christian gentlemen, composing that Conference, without regard to the merits of the complaint, would "clear" him, and thus lend themselves to a farce. (4) That if they will "clear" him of the "Texas charges," he promises to so offend as to give them a chance to expel him from the ministry. (5) And the implication of the whole is a bid for cheap martyrdom. If you will only clear of these "Texas charges"—that I really did violate the law of the church, which I promised to obey—I can say to the world that my desire to save the lost was so great I could not wait to see the result of a trial that, of course, ended in my acquittal. And because I couldn't wait to be acquitted, I must be expelled from the ministry; now just see what a martyr I am. In all the shadowy history of Roman sainthood, no title to canonization was ever given on a thinner veneer of sanctified pretense.

5. And to make his "Open Letter" more effective with the "holiness people," as he calls them, he charges all this oppression upon the Bishops. He says: "Bishops Keener and Wilson are the principal men in this matter. The Texas brethren showed me letters from said Bishops, justifying them in the course they pursued." Of course, with certain Methodists, so called, anything the brother might do would be justified if it involved opposition to the dreadful Bishops.

One would suppose from the above statement that Bishops Keener and Wilson inaugurated the proceedings that have resulted in the persecution of a brother whose only purpose is to save souls. Now, every preacher knows that presiding elders and pastors, when in doubt about the interpretation of law, write to the Bishops for counsel. Generally questions are submitted impersonally. It is doubted, therefore, if either of the Bishops referred to knew of Mr. Morrison's proposed visit to Dublin, Tex. They gave their opinion presumably on the questions submitted to them, without reference to Mr. Morrison or any particular individual. It is impossible to conceive, therefore, how they could be "the principal men in this matter." But the purpose of the brother was served, and he has read his "title clear" to a place in the martyrology of the ages. Alas! alas! for such trifling with ministerial vows and church obligations under a parade of piety.

Early Collections.

Every itinerant preacher, of course, desires to bring up his collections in full. The very best method of doing this is to begin early in the year. There is a great deal more money in circulation during the Winter and early Spring than during the Summer. Hence, there is wisdom in taking the collections, or at least a part of them, now. He who waits until Summer will in many instances be almost compelled to wait until Fall. And when all the collections are taken in a rush just before Conference, it is exceedingly difficult to secure the whole amount. As a rule, the pastor who makes a heroic and judicious effort early in the year will succeed, while he who procrastinates will fail.

This applies to the pastor's salary as well as to the Conference assessments. Stewards should not wait until late in the year to raise the salary. The dilatory methods of many Boards of Stewards are largely responsible for the disgraceful deficits which appear in our Conference Minutes. As we have comparatively few millionaires among us, it is much easier for our people to give small sums frequently through the year than to give large sums at the end of the year. In fact, it is impossible for a great many of our people to pay as much all at once as they can pay in frequent installments. Let stewards, therefore, begin at once to do the work which the church has assigned them. It is a shame to force a preacher to go in debt and pay credit prices for the necessaries of life by withholding most of his salary until just before Conference.

In the Living Present.

It is said that in European cities villains expose themselves intentionally to harm by the electric street car, etc., in order to secure damages. A lawyer of a corporation in our city told us recently that such daring imposition is nothing uncommon in our country. In Japan such fraud is impossible. It fines parents of injured children. Injured adults are refused action at court. The car can not evade its track. It has the right of way. It would be unjust to punish a corporation for the neglect of injured parties.

On the fifth of February, Evangelist Moody will be sixty years of age. His friends design, on that occasion, to make him a present of twenty-five thousand dollars. Anent Dr. Storrs' semi-centennial, he was the recipient of a check to the amount of five thousand dollars. Thus it will always be: Whosoever hath, to him it shall be given.

The newest mechanical contrivance is the attachment of a music-box to the bicycle. As soon as the latter is in motion, the music resounds. We suppose the principal air produced will be, "What fools these mortals be."

The papers intimate that our Secretary of War, Col. Lamont, is a secret Jesuit. He gave permission to the Roman Catholic hierarchy to erect a church at West Point. The site is government reservation. Hitherto chaplains of the different denominations officiated. Protestants refrained from asking the privilege of erecting a church-building for fear of being charged with conspiring to be recognized a State church. Now, Lamont did what Congress only can do—furnished government land for a Catholic Church. We trust that Congress will have the manhood of undoing the Secretary's arrogant action.

Humanitarianism is not Christianity. But without it the latter would be a misnomer. In opulent London, according to official report, seventy-one persons died of starvation during 1895. There may be dire want in your immediate neighborhood. Pray, and give to the needy!

Kimberly, in Africa, has macadamized streets. The material was taken from the neighboring hills. Recently the discovery has been made that said material contains many valuable diamonds. The streets were sold for temporary excavation. A certain section, containing only twelve square yards, brought ten thousand dollars.

We gladly support the Christian Advocate (Nashville) in its crusade against the savage foot-ball game. Our colleges seem to be the hot-bed of the bloody amusement. Some of them are producing, not erudite gentlemen, but ruffians. On our national Thanksgiving many such games were played. According to the Chicago Herald, forty-one participants were more or less injured on that day alone. ICH DIEN.

The only true talisman to protect us against the ills of life is a loving, trustful obedience to the will of God.

We fully appreciate such a compliment from such a source, and hope to be able continuously to merit out brother's good opinion.

Dr. W. C. Black, editor of the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE (the official organ of the Conference), was on hand, and in health. He gains on our people year by year—his paper having a stronger hold on the brethren than ever. Our own judgment is, the Doctor improves with age and gives his constituents the benefit of increasing "gifts and grace."

Our dear friend, Rev. H. M. DuBose, D. D., of the East Texas Conference, having been transferred to the Mississippi Conference, and stationed at Jackson, we take very great pleasure in reproducing the following complimentary notice from the Tyler (Texas) Daily Dispatch. This is no fulsome eulogy, but a fitting tribute to genuine merit. Dr. DuBose is loved and honored wherever known. He will receive a royal welcome to the land of his nativity.

This morning Dr. H. M. DuBose received the official notification of his transfer from this place to Jackson, Miss., where he will take charge of the First Methodist Church of that city.

Dr. DuBose has been in Tyler for about five years, during which time he has accomplished great and lasting good for his church. During the past year, largely through his efforts, the Marvin Church debt has been decreased about $25,000, and now amounts to only a little over $8,000. Bro. DuBose has made many friends in Tyler who have greatly admired him for his noble Christian character, his splendid intellectual endowments and his generous, kindly nature. He will be missed very much, not only by his own church, but by other churches as well. The Dispatch wishes the reverend gentleman abundant success in the Lord's work in his new field.

Let Us Call a Halt.

I wish to kindly and respectfully urge all local preachers of the M. E. Church, South (who must be urged), without the bounds of Seashore district, Mississippi Annual Conference, not to come within the geographical limitations of any pastoral charge in this district to conduct meetings, unless specially invited by the pastor, within whose territorial bounds the meeting is to be held.

Should anyone disregard this request, and proceed, as some have done recently, to invade any pastoral charge within the geographical bounds of the district, let it be known that any and all such offenders shall be dealt with as the Discipline of the M. E. Church, South, directs in such cases.

The Miller Organ you offered for the largest list of subscribers to the ADVOCATE arrived just before Conference. We have had time to test it. Our best musicians say that it has all the good qualities—sweet-toned, rich, clear, and easy action. I have never seen a prettier instrument anywhere.

Our sincere thanks to you and Junius Hart for such an instrument.

A Gift in the Real Sense.

A gift—in contradistinction to present—is for the relief or benefit of the receiver. Relief and benefit are both combined in the Knickerbocker Brace, which any physician would recommend as an eminently sensible and fitting Christmas gift. It is a suspender for men, a skirt supporter for women and children, and a brace for all—promoting deep respiration, preventing and correcting round shoulders and hollow chests. It is for sale by druggists and furnishers, by surgical appliance and general dealers, or mailed on receipt of $1 (silk, $1.50). Chest measure around body under the arms should be sent with order. The Knickerbocker Brace Co., Easton, Pa., will send descriptive circulars to anyone that writes for them.

Attention, Preachers.

We send out this week a number of sample copies to preachers in the patronizing Conferences. These we hope the brethren will distribute judiciously with a view to an increase of our subscription list. It will greatly facilitate the work of securing subscriptions to call attention to our premium offers, especially our Bible offer. Let it be remembered that the Bible we handle is no cheap affair. It is substantially bound. The Bible we sell to our subscribers at the low price of $2.35 costs those who are not subscribers $5—the regular catalogue price. Let the brethren also remember that we will offer after a short time several premiums to agents. Read what Bro. Gladney says on this page concerning the organ he secured by working for the ADVOCATE. The instrument far exceeded his expectations.

Every new cash subscription sent in after this date will count in the contest. Therefore, the brethren need not wait for our offer. Let them push the canvass at once. Those who compete for premiums must send in the full subscription price. We can not give the premiums and commissions too. But all unsuccessful competitors will have their commissions refunded.

CHRISTMAS THOUGHTS FOR THE OLD.

It is weary to be old!
For the world hath lost its beauty, and is strangely drear and cold;
And the wine of life has vanished, and its dregs alone are left,
And the aged ones are lonely as they linger sore bereft.

It is dreary to be old!
To outlive one's strength and beauty like a story oft retold;
Times and fashions change and vary, people grow beyond our reach;
Memory fails, and footsteps falter; slow and stammering grows the speech.

It is blessed to be old!
For the nearer draws the city with the streets of shining gold;
And the threads of life drop idly from the listless, idle hands,
While the ears are daily listening for the keel upon the sands.

It is blessed to be old!
For so closely lies the future with its treasures manifold;
There the dear ones are assembled, strangely drawing us to come;
It is drear and lonely waiting! it is blessed going home.

Christmas at Home.

We commend the following from the Christian Guardian as worthy of the attention of Christian parents everywhere:

Another year, with its joys and sorrows, has almost rolled around, and many happy children are anxiously looking forward to the day on which our Savior was born; that happy day, Caristmas, when presents of all kind are looked for. How cheerfully they retire on Christmas Eve, when told that the morning's dawn will bring to their view all that has been prepared for them. Morning finds them; bright and early, clapping their hands, shouting for joy, as they behold the glorious family Christmas-tree which has sprung up during the night, as if by magic, decorated with many beautiful little presents designed to gladden their hearts. Their countenances beam with expressions of gratitude. Their jubilant voices are indicative of the utmost joy. They feel as though home was the centre of attraction, and will not feel inclined to spend the day elsewhere. All day they are busy enjoying their little Christmas-tree, and feel that their parents are their best friends. This enjoyment is complete. When night comes, all feel that they had a pleasant time, and parents feel doubly paid for all their trouble in favor of their little ones. It is not necessary to go to much expense in getting up such happy occasions. A little ingenuity, skillful hands and kindness will do a great deal; it will always be remembered and appreciated. A few cents spent now, in the right way, will probably do more good than dollars in after life. We should not fail to improve the opportunity to impress the youthful minds with all the good we can, and watch over them and guide them aright. Home, above all other places, should be made pleasant and cheerful. Pleasant homes make pleasant and obedient children. Many well-meaning parents fail, through ignorance of domestic duties, to make home pleasant for their children, and have in after years often greater cause for sorrow. The child feels as great an interest in the erection of a cob-house as the parent does in that of a mansion, and should not be interfered with in its playful labors. Better have the best room strewn with paper cuttings, chairs turned over, and playthings scattered over the floor, than to refuse to indulge them in their childish sports. Children's minds, as well as their bodies, gain strength by action. If they are thwarted in their playful designs at home by indiscreet parents, they will, in all probability, as they grow older, seek amusements elsewhere, fall in with the wicked, and finally enter upon the broad road of destruction. Be gentle, though firm, with them. Be just towards them. Sympathize with them in all their little troubles. Win their confidence. Encourage them in all their little enterprises. Praise all their good deeds. Reprove them when necessary. Furnish them with good books and papers to read. Give them a little table or desk, or even a little box turned over, something they can call their own. Cultivate their business faculties. Teach them domestic economy. Give them all the general information you can. Unravel all their little difficulties, and home will be their chief attraction, and, when they are grown up, and tossed about on life's rough billows, the associations of the home of their childhood, and especially those happy Christmas Days, will always be fresh in their memories, and exert a salutary influence upon all their actions.

Christmas.

It is not gifts of gold and pearls and diamonds, of furs and lace and costly pictures, of checks and purses, that maintain the Christmas spirit; for the little pin-cushion made by a child's hands has been known to be of more value than all of these put together, and to afford more cheer and satisfaction and Christmas joy; the pebble, the pressed leaf, are as precious when given and accepted with love. It is not the ringing of the church bell, sweet as the sound is over the crisp snow and in the early starlit darkness, for far away in remote frontier clearings, where the sound of the church-going bell is unknown, the Christmas spirit and the Christmas joy are felt. It is not the hanging up of holly and of pine, for Christmas is Christmas still among blooming orange groves and in the midst of tropical seas. It takes, in fact, none of the customs in vogue among our ancestors or known even to our childhood to give the day its own sweetness. It is the acknowledgement of the beauty and holiness of that character which the day commemorates, and the wish, if not indeed the endeavor, to do some of the same work as that which has been wrought by this beauty and holiness in all of nearly two thousand years, which gives the day its own power, its own loveliness. Wherever we are, at the north pole or at the equator, in poverty or in wealth, in a palace or in a prison, it is possible that Christmas shall be a day of joy to us, and possible that we may make it a day of joy to others; that we may show, in our own feeble part of the showing, that we ourselves were included in the meaning of the song the herald angels sang; and that we have accepted our share of the blessed burden of carrying the message or good-will to all the earth.—Harper's Bazar.

Christmas Remembrances.

Appeals are coming to us all the time for help to make the coming holidays bright and happy for those who will not, unless we remember them, have a "merry Christmas." Every family can do something to help somebody. Children should be especially interested in this matter of Christmas giving, and should be encouraged to "save up" or put away some of their store to give to the poor. This year many fathers who have been able to make Christmas a day to be remembered by their families are out of employment. They can not get the necessities for their families, and of course the gifts for Christmas must be entirely given up. Those whom the Lord has blessed with means to make their children have a "merry Christmas" should see that some other children who are in danger of losing their pleasure at this season should be remembered. The years are but few before children are grow up and the wonderful Aladdin-lamp of the Christmas-time loses its brightness. Surely everyone who reads this appeal must know of some family who will be made happy by Christmas gifts. You all know of the different institutions also that are making appeals at this time for help. Put yourself in the way of finding out how you can do something to aid some of them in their grand work of making the day we celebrate as the birthday of our Lord Jesus Christ full of pleasant memories. There is but a short time now before Christmas, so what we do must be done quickly. Let us get about our work at once, and bless others who have not been blessed so abundantly as we have. —New York Evangelist.

Religion the Best Educator.

Religion quickens the intellect as truly as the conscience. It prompts to many and diversified efforts for others, and thus imparts breadth of mind and a valuable development of one's powers. It likewise supplies new motive, and that the highest, and one having a personal quality also, the motive of affectionately and reverently serving the Almighty. Furthermore, it suggest the best uses of knowledge when gained. It keeps constantly before the mind the great truth that knowledge is more a means than an end in God's sight, a truth which students who are not Christians very often overlook or never learn.—The Congregationalist.

AN OLD SONG RESUNG.

BY R. B. S.

Sing a song o' sixpence,
A pocketful of gold,
Four-and-twenty secrets
Watting to be told.

Watt till Christmas morning,
Secrets will be out,
Isn't that a jolly time
To hear the children shout?

Children in the parlor
Pulling out their toys;
Parents in the doorway
Laughing at their noise;
Postman on the doorstep
Handing up the mail—
Isn't this a merry time?
Pleasures never fail!

—Our Little Ones.

The Wife.

Only let a woman be sure she is precious to her husband, not useful, not valuable, not simply convenient, but lovely and beloved; let her be the recipient of his polite and hearty attentions; let her feel that her cares and love are noticed, appreciated and returned; let her opinion be asked, her approval be sought, and her judgment respected in matters of which she is cognizant; in short, let her be beloved, honored and cherished, in fulfillment of her marriage covenant, and she will be to her husband, her children and society, a wellspring of happiness. She will bear pain and toil and anxiety, for her husband's love is a tower and a fortress. Shielded and sheltered therein, adversity will have lost its sting. She may suffer, but sympathy will dull the edge of sorrow. A house with love in it—and by love I mean love expressed in words and deeds, for I have not one spark of faith in love that never crops out—is to a horse as a person to a machine; one is life, the other mechanism; the unloved woman may have bread just as light, a house just as tidy as the other, but the latter has a spring of beauty about her, a joyousness, a penetrating and pervading brightness to which the former is an entire stranger. The deep happiness of her heart shines out in her face. It gleams over. It is airy, graceful and warm, welcoming with her presence. She is full of devices, and plots, and sweet surprises for her husband and family. She is never done with the romance and poetry of life. She herself is a lyric poem setting herself to all pure and gracious melodies. Humble household ways and duties have for her a golden significance. The prize makes her calling high, and the end sanctifies the means.—Selected.

A business man from Baltimore was traveling a few years since in the far West. Overtaken by the darkness, he sought shelter in a lonely cabin cut in mid-prairie. To his dismay, he found, on entering, several stalwart men, almost savage in their appearance. He had on his person a large sum of money. He tried to seem at ease, but with very limited success. He was in great trepidation. Plans for escape, and for defense, were chasing each other through his brain. Little was said. At length the old man who was the head of the house arose and reached up to the high mantel and took down a well-used Bible, and said that they were in the habit of having family worship before going to bed. He read the Word of God reverently, amidst profoundest silence and attention. Then all these sunburnt, weather-beaten men kneeled down and the father offered the devout evening prayer. Our friend dismissed his fears and laid himself down and slept with a more complete sense of security than he would have had in his own house, surrounded by the police force of the great city.

Speaking Slightingly of Women.

When a young man habitually speaks slightingly of women, one may feel reasonably sure that a moral blight rests upon his own character. A scathing rebuke was once conveyed to a man of this class, who at a public dinner at which no ladies were present, was called upon to respond to the toast "Woman." He dwelt almost entirely upon the frailties of the sex, claiming that the best among them are little better than the worst, the chief difference being in their surroundings. At the conclusion of his speech, one of the guests arose and said, "I trust the gentleman, in the application of his remarks, refers to his own mother and sister, not to ours." This young man in his low estimate of women unconsciously verified a sententious saying by the author of "Youth:" "The criterion of a man's character is not his creed, religious, intellectual, or moral; it is the degree of respect he has for woman." As a contrast to the light and flippant tone in which too many young men of the present day speak of the other sex, is the noble tribute from an eminent clergyman, who says, "I am more grateful to God for the sense that came to me through my mother and sisters of the substantial integrity, purity and nobility of womanhood than for almost anything else in this world."

Find It in the Bible.

A member of the church and a generally supposed-to-be student of the Bible, was being questioned by his nine-year-old son, as only a nine-year-old son can question. The boy could ask more questions in five minutes than Solomon could answer in five years. At last, after he asked everything he could think of from the science of navigation to the cultivation of coffee, he put the question:

"Papa, who was Shylock?"

"Shylock, my son," came the paternal answer, "why, I am surprised. Go read your Bible and find out, sir."

"The mother usually is the sole religious educator of the children." We met with that sentence in a communication lately, and it set us to thinking and reflecting until "up indignation came." We had this feeling for two reasons. The first was because the sentence expressed what, alas! is too often true; that the mother is the sole religious teacher of the children. This ought not to be so. The father is equally responsible with the mother for the training and religious character of the child. It awakens indignation to think that this should be so. But we were indignant because the sentence quoted gave expression to a sentiment that has become very common, namely, that the mother is mainly responsible for the religious training of the children. We do not believe that idea has the least countenance in the Word of God. Parents are everywhere yoked together in this matter, and are held equally responsible.—Christian Instructor.

No boy, no girl, can ever come to be utterly bad who remembers only love and tenderness and unselfishness and sweetness as associated with father and mother in the old-time home. Give them manly and womanly example, give them training, give them the inspiration of devoted lives, give them these higher, deeper things. Do not care so much as to whether you are accumulating money, so that you can leave them a fortune. I really believe that the chances are against that being a blessing for a boy. But leave them an accumulated fortune of memories and inspirations and examples and hopes, so that they are rich in brain and heart and soul and service. Then, if you happen to leave them the fortune besides, if they have all these, the fortune will be shorn of its possibilities of evil, and will become an instrument of higher and nobler good.—Minot J. Savage.

If a man does not make new acquaintances as he advances through life, he will soon find himself left alone. A man should keep his friendship constantly in repair.—Dr. Johnson.

The Christian's love is a gift of the Holy Spirit worked in the heart by a sense of God's love to us in nature and providence, but chiefly in redemption.—Bishop Jackson.

Science says that the coming man (also the "coming woman") will depend for food supply more on the chemist and the laboratory than on the products of the field and farm. However that may be, it is sure that intelligent people everywhere now depend upon

Mrs. R. M. Barrington.

On Nov. 8, 1896, to Mrs. R. M. Barrington came the summons to depart this life and come up higher, to be forever with the Lord.

The Crystal Springs Auxiliary to the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society, recognizing her grand and noble character, desires to attest its appreciation of one whose life was so valuable; therefore,

Resolved, That we feel deeply the loss of one whose quiet, unobtrusive manner, blended with a faith strong in the Lord of hosts, made her an exemplary Christian, and one whose absence from the sphere of usefulness in this life is to be lamented.

Resolved, That, as a society, we honor her memory as friend, co-laborer, and faithful follower of the Lord—one whose life of communion with God and intimacy with his Word is well worthy of emulation. May the Lord give unto each of us, his hand-maidens, a desire to be like consecrated to him, and raise up others fitted to take up the work where she has laid it down! In sympathizing with the family in this sad affliction, we rejoice that we can commit all things to a loving Father.

Resolved, That the above shall be sent to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE and the Crystal Springs Meteor for publication, and be spread upon the Minutes of the society.

ANNA MIDDLETON,

OBITUARIES.

CESSNA—Dr. RUFT. A. CESSNA died at his home in Claiborne county, Miss., Oct. 7, 1896, aged sixty-six years ten months and two days.

He joined the Baptist Church while a boy, and, being very apt, soon stepped forward as a leader, conducting the young men's prayer meeting and doing whatever else his hands might find to do.

In the late Civil War he made a brave, true soldier, and being not only true to his country, but also true to God, he would at night, after the day's march was over or the din of battle had ceased, call his messmates together for prayers. During early manhood he taught school, clerked, kept books, etc., for a livelihood. He was twice married—first to Miss Sarah E. McRee, and after her death to Miss Mollie Garrison. He had by each of his wives three children—two sons and one daughter—all of whom preceded him to the spirit-land save the two daughters, who are left to mourn his loss.

After the death of his first wife he joined the Methodist Church, and continued an active Christian until the death of his second wife, which blow seemed too severe for him, and he grew cold and indifferent spiritually, and finally withdrew from the church. He was a graduate of the Medical College of Cincinnati, Ohio, and for a good many years a practicing physician of no mean reputation. Having grown old and rather infirm, he devoted his time to office practice and merchandising. He was honest as a man, physician, and merchant.

Though he had wandered away in sin, yet, thank God! he never lost faith in the omnipotence of the blood of Jesus, the efficacy of prayer, and the infinite mercy of God. It was my privilege to visit him several times during his long and painful illness, and I always found him patient, gentle, and kind. During these hours of suffering and trial God consumed the dross and refined the gold of his nature, and he reassumed the vows of the church, gave evidence of his acceptance with God, and died a peaceful death. May Heaven's richest blessing rest upon the bereaved daughters!

W. M. STEVENS.

FITZGERALD—On Oct. 30, 1896, the dark angel of death visited our home in Aberdeen, Miss., and bore away the spirit of FANNIE FITZGERALD, daughter of W. E. and F. C. Fitzgerald. She was born Feb. 22, 1879, in Quitman, Miss.

Only seventeen years was this sweet flower spared to us. She budded on earth only to blossom in heaven. To know her was but to love her.

Fannie was sick just two weeks with that dreaded disease, typhoid fever. Her suffering was very intense, but she bore it without a murmur. She was a pure, consecrated Christian, having given her young life to the Savior several years ago.

It is hard for us to live without sweet Fannie, but the Lord doeth all things for the best. We must now in humble submission to the Lord's will. She has gone to be with her mother, who died when she was a little babe, and other loved ones who have been watching and waiting for her.

A sorrowing father, sister, brother, grandmother, grandfather, and a host of relatives and friends mourn her loss. She will be sadly missed in the home, Sunday-school, and school-room.

May the Lord whom she served so well keep safely those of her loved ones, and bring them all safely to meet her again where parting is no more!

SISTER.

NABERS—Mrs. S. O. NABERS (nee Bigbea) was born Feb. 28, 1832, and died near West, Miss., Nov. 28, 1896. She was converted and joined the M. E. Church, South, in September, 1848. November 22, 1849, she married Joel A. Howell. Seven children blessed this union. Five survive their mother and mourn their irreparable loss, but they all know where to find her, and are, thank God! trying to live so as to meet her where sorrows never come. All are members of the church she loved. Her husband died Oct. 4, 1863, of wounds received in the battle of Chickamauga. In 1866 she married W. F. Nabers, who died in March, 1885. In all the relations of life she lived a true Christian. The writer has known her forty-seven years, and as wife, mother, sister, friend, she was always true, loving, gentle. She suffered for months before her death, but her trust in God triumphed over pain. She expected death, and was prepared for it. Nothing was left undone; not even her editor of the ADVOCATE was forgotten. Oh, may all of us, her loved ones, remember to be patient, faithful and true in all the trials and temptations of this life, so that we may meet her around the throne of God!

F. A. HOWELL.

Bowling Green, Miss.

GAYDEN—The angel of death has again visited our little church and wafted the gentle spirit of Mr. I. G. GAYDEN to that "beautiful home beyond;" and while we are bowed down in sorrow we know that God has only taken his own.

Mr. Gayden was a true Christian, and died happy in the love of his Savior. His church has lost a shining light, his wife a kind and devoted husband, his children an affectionate father, and the community a good citizen. He was a faithful teacher of the Bible class in the Gayden Sunday-school for several years; and may the class endeavor to follow the kind instructions of their teacher as to how they ought to live! His place can never be filled, and his death has cast a shadow of sadness over the entire neighborhood.

May the richest blessings of God rest upon the bereaved ones, and may they remember that they have another tie that binds them closer to heaven! Another loved one has gone before to welcome them when they cross the "valley of death" to that home of eternal bliss.

M. M.

TIER—Sister SUSAN MCGEE TIER was born in the State of Alabama, May 8, 1817, and died at her home in Red River parish, La., Aug. 15, 1896. She was married to B. F. Tier, Dec. 31, 1838. Two children were born unto them, both of whom and a husband survive her. Sister Tier joined the M. E. Church, South, August, 1879, of which she was a consistent member until her death. Her end was peaceful. She expressed herself as being ready and waiting. That Savior whom she loved was her comfort and support in death. The grave was not dark to her vision, and the waters were not chilly which divide this from the heavenly land.

May God comfort those who mourn her loss, and may they be stimulated to so live that they may meet her in that land where no storm-clouds rise; where there is no sorrow, nor sickness, nor death; where those long parted meet to part no more!

Her pastor, WILSON MOORE.

PEYTON—LAMAR PEYTON was born at Keachie, La., Nov. 6, 1873; died at Natchitoches, Nov. 26, 1896.

Keachie M. E. Sunday-school is sore bereaved in the death of one of its beloved members, who has been one of our number since his early childhood.

Whereas, God, in his infinite wisdom, has seen fit to remove from our midst our beloved fellow-student, Lamar Peyton; therefore, be it

Resolved, That while we bow in humble submission to that will which is too wise to make mistakes and too merciful to be unkind, we deeply deplore our loss. Lamar, having just passed his eighteenth mile-stone, was budding into a bright and promising manhood. Always quiet, gentle, and affable of manner, he had many friends. He was a devoted son, an affectionate brother, a kind friend. We will all miss his genial smile, but we hope that our loss is his gain, and that his death may cause his brothers and comrades to pause and consider the uncertainty of life, even for the young and healthy. If by the sacrifice of his life others are brought nearer the cross, we can see the hand of a wise Providence in this affliction.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family and also to the NEW ORLEANS CHRISTIAN ADVOCATE.

We should never forget that the religion of Christ is for men and women as they are, with their natural capacity, with their different gifts and varied temperaments. We should not expect artificial effects from it. It was never meant to erase all peculiarities, to change capacities, and to make all gifts alike in quality and quantity. If it had been, we certainly would have had an illustration of it in the disciples of our Lord. Those twelve men differed as radically one from another after their conversion as before. Peter still preserved his impulsive temperament. Thomas still had his tendency to doubt. John was emotional and mystical, and each of the others had his own peculiar stamp of life and character.—Independent.

Something Good in Dixie

Please understand I am a woman of Indiana, not of Dixie, but do appreciate this good; delight to acknowledge it that all persons afflicted as I have been may know there is hope and happiness for them. I had been a stammerer from childhood; sometimes as unable to speak as though dumb. Had tried several cures, but all of them failed. Then, as a last resort, I tried Rev. G. W. Randolph's Cure for Stuttering or Stammering, and now am CURED. Four days after complying with the requirements of this Cure, I received by mail that which enabled me to talk with such ease and indicate satisfaction, which, to one who endureth affliction as long and severely as I have, is a "veritable gladness in the soul." I have never seen Rev. Randolph, but have found him to be a man of his word, and is highly recommended to church circles, also by State officials. His Voice School, or Institute, is located at No. 463 Poplar Street, Memphis, Tenn., and to persons going to this school a cure is GUARANTEED. The Cure by mail gives the same happy results, if instructions are carefully followed, which even children can do, and those needing the benefit of this GOOD will find him as considerate in his terms they need not suffer these afflictions longer. Submitted for the sake of the unfortunate.

The Holman Self-Pronouncing S. S. Teachers' Bible

Divinity Circuit, Round Corners, etc.

CONTAINS THE FOLLOWING HELPS TO THE STUDY OF THE BIBLE.

Concordance, with Contexts, over 40,000 References; Index to Persons, Places and Subjects, 16,000 References; Scripture Atlas, with Index; Glossary of Bible Words; Bible Calendar; Summary and Analyses of the Old and New Testaments.

A Self-Pronouncing Dictionary of Proper Names and Foreign Words contained in the Bible, comprising about 3,500 words, giving the pronunciation, the meaning, and the location of the text where the word occurs for the first time.

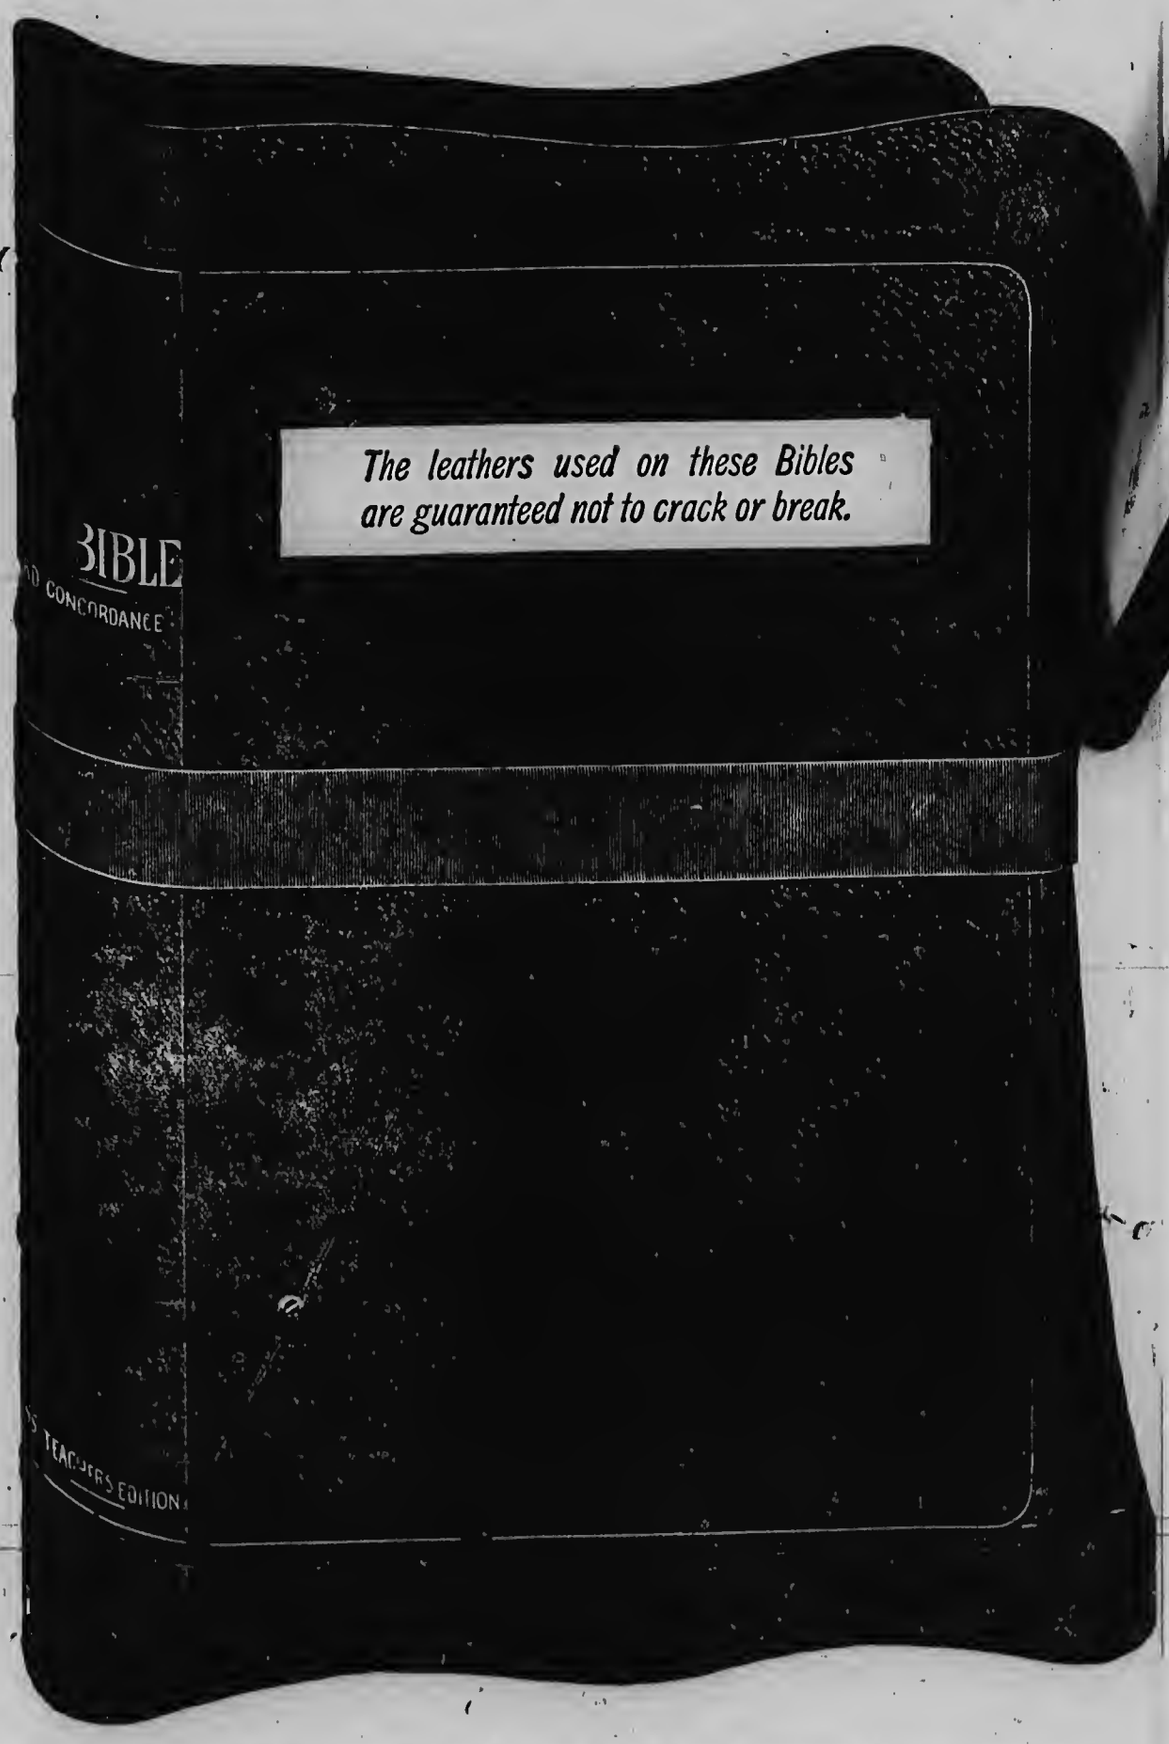
Exhaustive Articles on Biblical History, Geography, Topography, Natural History, Ethnology, Botany, Chronology, Music and Poetry; a Complete Harmony of the Gospels, Tables of Parables, Miracles, Prophecies, Prayers, Money, Weights and Measures, Jewish Sects and Orders, etc.

TWELVE FULL-PAGE MAPS IN COLORS.

Every proper name in the text is syllabified and accented, and has the vowels marked according to the most authoritative modern standards of pronunciation. The text is in exact conformity with that of the world-famous Oxford S. S. Teacher's Bible. All the valuable "Helps to the Study of the Bible" contained in the Oxford Bible are retained.

The only Teacher's Bible with a self-pronouncing text. No similar Bible was ever obtainable heretofore; in fact, no publishers ever attempted its publication.

"The essence of fifty expensive volumes, by men of sacred learning, is condensed in these 'Helps.'"



The large-type (Bourgeois) edition sells to persons who are not subscribers for $5. Our subscribers get it, on conditions specified below, for $2.35. The same Bible in Minion type, which is somewhat smaller than Bourgeois, we offer to our subscribers, on conditions named below, for $1.55. To those who are not subscribers we sell it at $3.15. We also handle an edition in still smaller type (Emerald). Our subscribers get this for $1.15.

In order to get anyone of these at these rates it is necessary to pay your subscription one year in advance, viz., to December, '97. (A little later it will be January '98.)

For twenty cents we will have your name engraved in gilt letters on the outside of the book.

COVERED WITH HUMOR

When I was thirteen years old I began to have sore eyes and ears, and from my ears a humor spread. I doctored with five different skilful doctors, but they did me no good. My disease was Eczema. By this time it had gone all over my head, face, and body. Nobody thought I would live, and would not have but for CUTICURA REMEDIES. I used four boxes of CUTICURA, five cakes of CUTICURA SOAP, and three bottles of CUTICURA RESOLVENT. My hair all came out at that time, but now it is so thick I can hardly comb it. I am sixteen years old, weigh 130 pounds, and am perfectly well.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

DOMESTIC.

An ordinance calling for a four-cent fare on all street car lines in Chicago has been passed by the city council.

Chas. R. Crisp, of Georgia, son and successor of the late ex-Speaker Crisp, was sworn in as a member of the National House last week.

The New York police department asks for the modest little sum of $7,000 000 for the expenses to be incurred in keeping the Gothamites in order during 1897.

Tennessee wants a $130 000 appropriation from Congress for a government building and exhibit at the Centennial Exhibition. She is likely to get it, too, seeing that Omaha had a similar grant.

The Salvation Army has a bureau for tracing lost and missing friends, and thousands are thus found every year through the army's agents throughout the world. The only charge made is for postage.

The statement of Secretary of State Olney to the effect that even should both Houses of Congress pass the resolution recognizing the independence of Cuba, the Executive would not accept it as binding, is a most important announcement.

The library of Princeton University has received a valuable addition to its collection in the shape of a series of early editions of Virgil, numbering altogether 312 volumes, by the gift of Mr. Junius S. Morgan, of New York. The volumes are valued at $50,000.

It is reported that the Shoshone and Arapahoe Indians of Wyoming have raised enough oats and potatoes during the past season to supply their own wants and to fill the contract for these commodities at Fort Washakie.

At a meeting of the Executive Committee of the Polish National Alliance, in Chicago, $500 was appropriated for the aid of Cuba, and it was decided to collect $2,000 more for the same purpose among the Polish citizens of Chicago.

The action of the Foreign Affairs Committee of the United States Senate, in reporting favorably the Cameron resolution providing for the recognition of the independence of Cuba, is a very serious matter. Should Congress finally adopt this resolution and pass it over the President's veto, Spain could not but regard it as a "casus belli," and the declaration of war would be a natural, if not an inevitable, result.

The convention called to take action upon the subject of the preservation of the channel through the Eads jetties, and of the improvement of Southwest Pass, assembled last week at Washington. The gathering was a very influential one, and represented all sections of the Mississippi Valley. Delegates were present from Wisconsin, Iowa, Missouri, Tennessee, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Arkansas and Louisiana.

FOREIGN.

The amount contributed for foreign missions during 1895 by all sections of Christians in the British isles, according to Canon Scott Robertson's twenty-fifth annual summary, was £1,387,665.

TRUST.

I know not the hour of His coming,
I know not the day of the year,
But I know that He bids me be ready
For the step that I some time shall hear.
And whether on earth or in heaven,
Down here, or mid scenes of the blest,
I am sure that His love will surround me,
And with Him I will leave all the rest.

I know not what lieth before me—
It may be all pleasure, all care;
But I know at the end of the journey
Stands the mansion He went to prepare.
And whether in joy or in sorrow,
Through valley, or mountain, or hill,
I will walk in the light of His presence,
And His love all repining shall still.

I know not what duties are waiting
The hands that are willing and true,
And I ask but the strength to be faithful
And do well what he gives me to do.
And if he should bid me to stand idle,
Just waiting in silence and pain,
I have only to trust and be faithful,
Some time he'll make it all plain.

"Some Things" Some One Else "Don't Like."

When there appeared, a short time since, in the columns of a paper which has long been a constant and valued visitor to our home, an article captioned "Some Things I Don't Like," I felt constrained to cry aloud, "How long, oh Lord, how long!" And I have ever since been wondering and wondering what object the author had in view when writing it, and what it was expected to accomplish. I am sorry indeed it was not a little more voluminous than it was—i. e., I wish the author had told us whether or not the cornet, violin, and other instruments of like character, come in for a share of condemnation at her hands along with the choir and the solos. But we may consider ourselves justifiable in concluding that such is the case, since, in many instances, and in many of our strongest churches—churches strong from a spiritual as well as from a numerical or financial standpoint—one or more of these instruments is included in the paraphernalia of the "side show" which we find mentioned in her article. And most of us will not have forgotten that "Aunt Betsy" it was who wielded the pen that made the marks that conveyed the ideas herein referred to, and we will also remember that she didn't give her postoffice. In consequence of this omission, some of us are still wondering whether or not it was our "Aunt Betsy" who wrote the article.

Concerning the position which a church choir should occupy, "Annt Betsy" is partly right, and at least nine-tenths wrong. I agree with her that "on the side in front" is not the best place for a choir; but to place them on the "front seats" would by no means improve the matter. I have been intimately associated with church choirs for several years, and during that time have been deeply interested in them and in everything that could contribute to their success and to the success of the music of the sanctuary; and after mature consideration of the various positions occupied by various choirs, I have settled down to the conclusion that a position in the rear of the pulpit possesses advantages over any other, and is open to the fewest possible objections. And yet the same objections urged by our "Aunt" against the "side-show" would obtain if we shifted our basis of operations and confined the performance behind the pulpit. You have, no doubt, heard it said that "there are a few ways to kill a dog, besides choking him to death on butter;" and I am equally sure the objectionable features connected with this choir can be remedied without seating the choir on the front benches. But before we resort to radical measures of any description, will it not be well enough to assure ourselves that the objectionable features under consideration have a bona-fide existence, and are not merely the creatures of some one's imagination? Is it a fact that the choir, as conducted at the present time, is a hindrance rather than a help?

Concerning the value of a good choir as an adjunct to public worship, there is, I am happy to say, at the present day and time but little difference of opinion. Many—indeed all, so far as I know—of our most progressive and efficient preachers consider a good choir an absolutely indispensable feature of public worship, and the part that it plays therein scarcely less potent for good than the preached Word itself. And verily these men are authority!

Our venerable relative says she never knew a revival where new songs were used exclusively, which is equivalent to saying her observations along this line have been very limited; and if she will but familiarize herself with the histories of the greatest revivals that have occurred throughout the country during recent years, she will be convinced (and no doubt against her will) that she has failed to hear of things that were going on all around her. I believe most of us agree that the failure on the part of any given individual to know of the existence of a thing does not necessarily preclude the possibility of said thing's existence. And not only is the statement just made with reference to revivals and new songs a fact, and a fact that few will have the hardihood to gainsay, but I have known a meeting which in the beginning promised great things, killed as dead as a meeting ever died, by the use of old, threadbare tunes that had not a spark of life or a suspicion of melody in them, and in which nobody cared to join but a few of the older members of the congregation, and to which nobody but them cared to listen. There prevails among us to some extent the notion that an old tune is bound to be a good tune, and that the older it gets the better tune it is. (And I can't allow this opportunity to pass without saying that this idea must have greatly influenced the committee to whom we are indebted for the latest edition of our Standard Hymn and Tune Book when they were engaged in its compilation.) Notwithstanding the praise that has been lavished upon this edition, it is by no means "up to date," and it is to be hoped that the next session of the General Conference will order a revision. The reason so many choirs and congregations are using books other than the Standard is found in the fact that the latter does not meet their want; and some of those of us who use the Hymn and Tune Book do so purely through loyalty. Let's keep our hymn book up to date if we have to revise it every four years. I would not for a moment think of saying there are no pretty tunes among our old tunes, because many of our old pieces of church music are in no sense inferior to the best productions of our best modern composers. Such pieces as Toplady, Bethany, Nettleton and Martyn are not only rarely excelled, but seldom equaled. Their inspiring strains seldom fail to touch a responsive chord in the human breast, while their simple melody charms old and young alike. These tunes are immortal. They will still be favorites with the church militant when those of us who love to sing them now have long since mingled our voices in the "nobler, sweeter songs" of the church triumphant. But there is no reason under the sun why we should confine ourselves to the use of these pieces to the exclusion of the many valuable productions of our own day and time; and while there are no reasons for excluding the new music, there are excellent reasons, and many of them, for introducing and using it liberally. If such a course will bring people to church, that is in itself sufficient reason for its adoption. Let's suppose one case. —C. M. P.

Religion does not consist in occasionally doing religious things. It consists rather in doing everything religiously.

Simultaneous Missionary Mass Meetings.

The secretaries of the Missionary Societies and Boards of Foreign Missions in the United States and Canada have for several years held an Annual Conference for the consideration of the interests of world-wide missions. At the last Conference in New York City it was recommended that wherever possible missionary meetings should be held throughout both countries during the second week of January, 1897. To quote the words of the committee appointed to arrange for these meetings: "The campaign shall consist of a sermon preached by the pastor of each church on Sabbath morning, Jan. 10; of special prayer for the success and enlargement of the church's foreign missionary work on Wednesday evening, Jan. 13; of interdenominational rallies on Thursday evening, Jan. 14, and of a grand mass meeting on Friday evening, Jan. 15."

Where this program is not practicable, one more suited to the local community may be substituted.

Accompanying the plan as outlined is the following appeal:

To the Pastors of the United States and Canada:

BELOVED BRETHREN: The twentieth century of the Christian era is upon us, and yet millions have never heard the name of Christ. The darkness of heathenism still enwraps nearly two-thirds of the population of the globe.

The "marching orders" of the church are explicit and imperative—"Go." There is no suggestion of limitation—"into all the world." The terms are universal—"Preach the gospel to the whole creation." Any narrower conception of the mission of the church is a belittling of our faith. Any smaller endeavor is unworthy of the Christian name.

The opportunity for world-wide evangelization was never so great as at present. Ability has kept pace with enlarging opportunity. The Christian Church has the men and the means. Her responsibility has, therefore, proportionately increased. Yet, in fields long occupied and white unto harvest, the laborers are all too few, the established work is crippled, re-enforcements are needed, advance is impossible until gifts are enlarged, while the church at home is suffering from the very heresy of inaction."

In the hope of quickening the church to a due conception of its blessed privilege and solemn responsibility in the sacred enterprise of missions, we issue this appeal, and, with the cordial co-operation of the Foreign Mission Boards in the United States and Canada, and of the Evangelical Alliance, we suggest the inclosed "Plan of Campaign."

The appeal is, first, to pastors. It has long been an axiom with our Mission Boards, that where there is a missionary pastor there will be a missionary church. The plan contemplates united action. It seeks a concentration of Christian thought on the theme of paramount importance. It aims to secure the cumulative force of a series of meetings. To insure the attainment of these ends, we ask your prayerful and hearty co-operation.

We hope that all of our pastors will respond to this appeal, and co-operate in the movement by preaching a missionary sermon on Sunday, Jan. 10. By following up the sermon with a missionary prayer meeting on Wednesday night of the same week, and, wherever possible, with a union missionary rally of Epworth Leagues on Thursday night, an awakening of conscience and increase of missionary zeal would surely be the immediate result. Above all, let prayer be offered for the baptism of the Holy Spirit. H. C. MORRISON,
WALTER R. LAMBUTH,
Secretaries.

A Christmas Carol from a Lone Roof-Tree.

For the first time since a baby stocking in our home told of the visit of Santa Claus, we are without "chick or child under the roof-tree"—this scribe, the companion of his youth, and "Jennie Wren," this latter name being the soubriquet given by younger members of the family to Annt M., whose presence for several years has brightened our home.

We three, the children, like Summer birds, having all gone away, are, nevertheless, having a glad day, a good time, and a happy Christmas. Old-time black mammy cook, Aunt Sarah, is doing the honors of the kitchen, preparing a Xmas turkey and potato pudding. That turkey, you can rest assured, will be "brown to a turn;" and that pudding "a dish fit for a king."

Having a good time, and the children all gone from home, scattered in different States and beyond the States? Yes, why not? It is a crisp, beautiful December day, an ideal day, even in our Sunny South. The flood of bright sunshine, melting the frost of the early morning and waking cheerful notes from the wood-wren along the fence corners, assures of a like lovely day all over the land. It must be a beautiful and glad day also in the homes of our children far away.

We were up before the sun, not to the sound of fire crackers and tin horns, as in other days under our roof-tree, but in health and vigor, and with glad and grateful hearts. A wholesome breakfast of oatmeal, hot corn muffins, such as few can make, and hot coffee, and we three, before a glowing grate, read together the Word of God, and bowed at the home altar, giving thanks for the return of Christmas Day—the day that calls to mind the message of the angel of "good tidings of great joy" to us and to all men: the advent of our Savior, Christ the Lord. The absent loved ones were remembered; and, though scattered miles and miles apart in body, were we not gathered together and all united at the throne of grace under the tender care of our heavenly Father?

We go over the Xmas days of the past, when the morning dawn awoke with the glad shout of "Xmas gift, Xmas gift," from the lips of little children, who leaped from warm beds, and clad, as yet, only in night robes, and barefooted, went ranging through family room, hall and parlor in search of the treasures left by a generous Santa Claus.

We come along down the years. One after another the children have grown away from us, and now, on this twenty-fifth day of December, 1896, we find ourselves alone under the roof-tree. And yet it is a glad and grateful day. The same glorious sunshine beams upon the absent ones, God's good providence is round about them, and the everlasting arms are underneath us all.

Can't see how you are having such a glad Xmas day, and the children all from home. Maybe you haven't many to make a difference when they are away. There are just nine of them—bright, active, willing-to-work, well educated, up-to-date boys and girls, members of the church. We reckon them in four colonies—one in East Mississippi; one, the largest colony, in the border city of Arkansas, and two in the Indian country. Some of the birds flown away have built nests, have homes of their own, and little ones, with merry voices, shout the "Xmas gifts" and renew the tin-horn chorus and fear of fireworks, as with us "in days lang syne." All of them, we trust, greet this blessed Christmas-tide in health and happiness, not unmindful of Him whose first great Christmas gift ushered in a reign of peace and good-will to the world.

We are grateful for the loving children God has given to us, and for all his mercies to us and to them; and, above all, we are grateful to God for the glorious gift of his Son, and for the hope of heaven. Why should it not be to us a time of gladness and of joy? And why should we not repeat the sounding joy, "Glory to God in the highest"? Why may we not sing a glad Xmas carol, though alone under the parsonage

Our Colportage and Sunday-School Work.

Colportage is a part of our system of church work, the primary design of which is not to establish book-stores, but to put our publications and other good literature on wheels and carry them to the people. This requires much travel and toil; but it is in keeping with itinerancy idea and economy for advancing Christianity.

The colporter receives his appointment annually from the Bishop, by Conference request, just as every other preacher does. This contemplates his traveling throughout the Conference and using all possible means to circulate good literature, on the one hand, and, on the other, the patronage and support of the preachers and laity.

For twelve years this writer has been serving in this capacity, and it has been to him "a work of faith and labor of love, in the patience of hope." He enters upon another year's work with gratitude for past success, and in hope of greater results in the future. It is my purpose, as heretofore, to give myself wholly to the work assigned me, to make it a matter of diligent study, prayer and effort. In this I most sincerely ask the practical co-operation of all our pastors, local preachers, Sunday-school superintendents and people generally.

Let us consider that we are partners in this business for the Lord and for souls, and that success will be proportionate to our mutual and hearty co-operation.

Let us strive together in our prayers and efforts for a greater dissemination of the Holy Scriptures and other good reading matter, and further advancement of the Sunday-school cause within our bonads than ever before.

Send me your orders, with cash or payment in sixty days, for what you want. Let cash always accompany orders for Sunday-school papers. Let every preacher and Sunday-school worker supply themselves for 1897 with the Sunday-school Magazine—50 cents; Hoss' Notes on the Lessons, 50 cents, or Hurlbut's Notes on the Lessons, $1. The lessons for 1897 will be in the Acts of the Apostles and the Epistles. Let us, with all the helps we can avail ourselves of, learn all we can from those important Scriptures.

Will the pastors and Sunday-school superintendents please let me know when I can serve them by visiting their charges or schools, or by sending them books and papers needed?

Yours in the work,

G. W. BACHMAN,
Colporter and S. S. Agent.

Kosciusko, Miss.

A First Visit to Conference.

The dream of years crystallized into determination, and the first day of December found us on our way to Conference, with the wind blowing straight from "Greenland's icy mountains," and bringing with it sleet and snow. The thought of the welcome awaiting us at our journey's end sustained us, and the kindly greetings of our then presiding elder as we boarded the train seemed but the echo of the "May you have a pleasant time!" of the friends at home.

Wednesday was bright and cold, and as we, for the first time, beheld the congregated wisdom and strength of our loved Mississippi Methodism, we could but wonder that more of our lay members do not attend Conference, and that these who have attended have said so little about it. Why, it was an inspiration, a source of strength, of courage, a renewal of faith, and we seemed "to catch a ray of glory by reflection" each day. The queer mixture of difference and similarity among the preachers was a revelation. There was one with an if-you-will-breathe-for-me-a-moment-I-will-rest air upon him—one who had outgrown his first circuit many leagues; one with the zeal of James and John, ready to call down the fire of ecclesiastical wrath on an erring brother; one doubting Thomas asking for "an easier work;" several whom one instinctively felt had their troubles boxed and labeled, "Not to be opened;" several whose "living on little with a cheerful mind" had imparted more of a spiritual than an earthy look, while the discreetly jolly one was ubiquitous. The editor of our ADVOCATE will never wait for Hercules; and however much we may have feared, we feel now that our paper is safe.

Of the love-feast Sunday, of the Bishop's sermon, and of the memorial service, we can only say that either one in itself was sufficient to give fresh impetus to the zeal of the coldest Methodist. While fitting tributes were being paid to the four good men and true who had answered the last roll call, we were profoundly grateful that not one of our host had to "surrender his credentials," but one and all, in "the unity of the Spirit," seemed ready to participate in the celebration of the Lord's Supper—a glorious ending to a happy Sabbath.

And then the appointments! One could almost feel the sway of soul as the preachers, in hushed expectancy, followed each wave of the Bishop's hand, each turn of his head, during his short address to them before assigning them to their fields of labor, where may God bless them everyone, and may this year witness a great ingathering for the Master! is the earnest prayer of Ian Maclaren.

It is not our purpose here to attempt any analysis of Dr. Watson's characteristics; explain why it is that he has received a welcome such as has seldom been given to a preacher from the "Mother Country." And yet we can not avoid the expression of one thought suggested by the sermon last Sunday. It is that a large part of his power is due to the peculiar combination of imagination and common sense. There is a very wide feeling that these two qualities are somehow incompatible, if not antagonistic.

Dr. Watson has shown that they are in truth complimentary. The imagination of the Italian picture of the crucifixion is truer to the thought and spirit of that event than the realistic picture, although the latter was more nearly in accord with historic fact. We need this at the present time, when there is so much talk about "hard facts," "looking at things as they are," "the reign of common sense," etc. The man who has drawn men and women to himself more than any other, whether in this city, in Chicago, or in Boston, who has delighted those of every class, has done it by showing his appreciation of the spiritual in humanity, and thus has been recognized by all as himself intensely human.

There is another thing very noticeable. Never obtrusively, always thoroughly, Dr. Watson is above all things else a preacher. His stories, with their fun and their pathos, their vivid description and quaint language, have the same characteristics as his sermons and lectures. He is filled with the thought of helping men and women in the strife that is upon them. Sometimes he lures them with ideals; sometimes he prods them with humor; always he helps them. No one can rise from reading him without a desire for purer, more successful life; and we believe that his readings all over the land will be found to bear fruit in higher purposes, more kindly judgment, more patient achievement.—New York Independent.

NOTHING TO DO.

"Nothing to do" in this world of ours,
Where weeds spring up with the fairest flowers,
Where smiles have only a pitiful play,
Where hearts are breaking every day?

"Nothing to do," thou Christian soul,
Wrapping thee round in thy selfish stole?
Off with the garments of sloth and sin!
Christ, thy Lord, hath a kingdom to win!

"Nothing to do?" There are prayers to lay
On the altar of incense, day by day!
There are foes to meet, within and without!
There is error to conquer, strong and stout!

"Nothing to do?" There are minds to teach
The simplest forms of Christian speech;
There are hearts to lure with loving wile,
From the grimmest haunts of sin's defile.

"Nothing to do?" There are lambs to feed,
The precious hope of the church's need;
Strength to be borne to the weak and faint,
Vigils to keep with the doubting saint.

"Nothing to do?" Hast thou tarried at home,
Idly waiting for work to come?
While happier toilers hurried by
To the vineyard fields, 'neath the Master's eye.

"Nothing to do?" In the market-place,
Friend, if he never sees thy face,
Canst thou expect at set of sun
To hear the Master say, "Well done!"

Report of Secretary of the Louisiana Conference Board of Church Extension.

The written history of church extension in the M. E. Church, South, in the State of Louisiana begins with the following resolution adopted by the Louisiana Annual Conference at its session held in New Orleans, January, 1882:

Resolved, That we, the Louisiana Annual Conference, memorialize the General Conference, at its next session in May, 1882, to take measures for the organization of a Church Extension Society, and that the delegates from this Conference be requested to present the matter in due form.

C. W. CARTER,

(Minutes La. Conf., 1882, p. 28)

At the meeting of the General Conference, held in Nashville, Tenn., May, 1882, the Board of Church Extension of the M. E. Church, South, was created, and assumed organized form in Louisville, Ky., on the twenty-fourth day of June, 1882.

The Louisiana Conference Board of Church Extension was organized at the session of the Louisiana Annual Conference, held in Mansfield, La., January, 1883. The first assessment for church extension was made that year, and the first report of collections for church extension in the Louisiana Conference was made to the Conference held in New Orleans, January, 1884.

The Louisiana Conference was thirty-eight years old when this first report of the result of organized effort in behalf of church extension was made. A great work had been done during these thirty eight years in the way of building churches and preaching the gospel in out-of-the-way places in our State. Louisiana was for a long time, and still is in part, missionary ground for Protestant Christianity. It was a glad day for Methodism in our State when this new and additional avenue for missionary operation was opened up by the organization of the Church Extension Society. I feel that I speak only truth when I say church extension work is missionary work.

At the time of the organization of our Conference Board of Church Extension, thirty-eight years after our organization as an Annual Conference, the reports show in the bounds of the Conference 173 churches, valued at $283,675. The reports of last year, thirteen years after the organization of our Conference Board, show 299 churches, valued at $520,190. This is an increase of 126 churches, and an increase in valuation of $236,515—all in less than thirteen years.

A great number of these churches that have been built since the organization of our Conference Board have received help from either the General Board or Conference Board of Church Extension, and I think it is safe to say that many of them would not have been built had they not received the timely aid given in this way.

During the thirteen years of its organized existence the Louisiana Conference Board of Church Extension has aided 47 churches in sums aggregating $6,172.75.

There has been collected by the Conference for church extension since the organization of the Board $13,394.28—a little over $1,000 a year. While these figures show that something—yea, much—has been done, they fall far below the measure of our ability.

The first report after our organization was $1,099.15. We then had a membership of 14,926. According to this showing, we paid at that time a little over 7 cents per capita for church extension. We reported last year something over 28,000 members, while we collected for church extension only $1,177.54. Look at these figures. From 1884, the date of our first report of collections for church extension, to 1895, the date of our last, there was an increase in membership of 13,074, and only $78.39 more reported for church extension in '95 than was reported in '84. Or look at it in this way: In 1895 we paid 3 cents less per capita for church extension than in 1884. This does not indicate a healthy growth in grace.

Since the Board of Church Extension has been in operation Louisiana has received help to the amount of $12,898—almost as much as has been collected. Are we satisfied with this showing? Are we content to increase our membership and decrease the amount of our contribution to this great missionary cause of our church? Methinks I hear the brethren uniting with me in a hearty negative to these questions: No, we are not satisfied with this showing. No, we are not content while our membership increases and our contributions decrease.

What does this 4 cents per capita for church extension mean? It means that there are many—yes, very many—of our members who give nothing. The problem that confronts us, that presents itself to this Board, that presents itself to every pastor, is how to get at, so as to get something, from these give-nothing members. With our present membership as reported last year 5 cents per capita would give us $1,400. This would be more than we have ever collected for church extension in any year. Does it not seem to you, my brethren, that we could collect from our membership an average of 5 cents per capita for this great cause? And yet we are not doing it. Suppose we could raise 10 cents, this would give us $2,800 annually with the present membership. This is what we ought to do; this I believe we can do if we try.

We should endeavor to make church extension with us what its name implies: "the stretching of the church from places where it is to places where it is not." Enlargement is our idea—expansion.

Too often, when we have secured a comfortable house of worship for ourselves, we are satisfied, and forgetful of others, who have not a like blessing. We are willing to cease our efforts to help others. This, too, very often after we have been literally helped in building our church by collections for church extension in other fields. A sense of gratitude for help afforded us—to say nothing of our duty and obligation to God—ought to cause us to bestir ourselves to do a like work for other needy places. Much has been done. From the humble, unpretentious chapel of the country place, where the faithful poor meet to worship, and from the latest up-to-date church in our large cities, we have evidence of the good work being done by church extension. Much more could be done; much more must be done. We have struggling communities in every district in our Conference where help is needed. With a little help at one point, those who are burdened and discouraged by debt would be able to pay off the indebtedness. A little help at another place would enable those who are anxious to build to carry out their long-cherished desire.

From our church in every quarter of our State comes to me, as secretary of your Board of Church Extension, requests for help. From the beautiful and fertile prairies of South and Southwest Louisiana, where the French Creole is beginning to long for the true light of the gospel of love; from the pine-clad hills of Middle and North Louisiana; from the new towns along our railroads; from our rich river bottom; from our Florida parishes; from everywhere comes the cry for help. We look at these applications—all of them expressive of actual need; all of them worthy—and then we look at our empty treasury, and our heart sinks within us, and we feel like crying out, "Men of Israel, help."

We would not have this empty treasury forever staring us in the face, and these unanswered cries for help forever ringing in our ears, if the Lord had had that which is his due "in tithes and offerings." Poverty, inability, is not the cause of the smallness of our collections. The cause of our failure must be sought elsewhere.

Our people are not well-informed. There is on the part of the average church member a startling amount of ignorance in regard to this and kindred enterprises of our church. There is in some localities a long-existing, strongly entrenched anti-missionary, anti-church extension spirit. The fact of not having this great work on the heart and conscience is almost universal amongst our people. We must have it put there. The conscience of the church must be quickened; must be aroused to the importance and present demands of this great missionary movement of our church.

Am I far wrong when I say it rests with the preachers, the pastors of the different charges, to bring about this awakening; to put this work, this cause, on the hearts and consciences of our membership?

We welcome to our Conferences, and take to our hearts, our connectional officers—our Dr. Morton, our Bishops. The information they bring us is helpful; the faith they inspire is a benediction; but it remains for us, the rank and file of the itinerant ministry, to carry this work to the homes, and put it on the minds of our people. It remains for us to get in touch with the masses who have heretofore given nothing—not even a thought—to this great cause, and get them to think and give. Do we always look at this work in a proper light? What is our first and last and highest thought while trying to raise these collections? The Conference Boards have assessed our district so much; the district stewards have assessed our circuit so much. The Conference expects me, as pastor, to see that the amount assessed, or as much thereof as possible, be collected; therefore, in order to make a good showing at Conference, I will try to get the assessments.

I have sometimes thought that the most exultant expression uttered on our Conference floor has come from some brother who, on tiptoe, was able to call out, "Bishop, my collections are all in full." I do not underestimate this motive, but would kindly warn against overestimating it, and at the same time call your attention to a purer, higher, nobler motive—one that lifts this whole work out of the commonplace and makes it Christ-like.

Not a collection should be taken, not a dollar should be given, not a church should be built until we are thoroughly imbued with the idea: this is to further the church of Christ in her great and only legitimate work of soul-saving. If we, as preachers, could always work with this as our motive—to save souls—if we could reach the great number of our membership who are so indifferent to our appeals for help, with this spirit our assessments would soon be in full; the money necessary to build churches for the purpose of carrying on this great work of soul-saving would come pouring into the treasury of the Lord.

O church of the living God! may the place of thy tent be enlarged; may the curtains of thy habitations be stretched forth; may thy cords be lengthened and thy stakes strengthened until then shalt break forth on the right hand and on the left, and thy seed inherit the Gentiles, and desolate cities be inhabited. Amen!

Setting up of Tabernacles.

In Exodus, fortieth chapter, first and second verses, we read that "the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, On the first day of the first month shalt thou set up the tabernacle of the congregation;" and Paul tells us that this tabernacle "was a figure for the time then present, in which were offered both gifts and sacrifices." With the coming of the new year it is the privilege of every child of God to set up a tabernacle for the offering of gifts and sacrifices. First, there is the tabernacle of consecration, where we can offer our "bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable to God." This will bring holy living and holy thinking, a constant feeding on the Bread of Life, and dwelling in the light of the knowledge of God, and the offering of the incense of prayer and supplication with thanksgiving. This, if not already set up, should be reared immediately, for without it we shall perish in darkness.

There is another which it is the duty of every head of a household to erect: that of family worship. Here is the altar of household faith, where, as in the building of the wall of the holy city, everyone must build "over against his own house," or that house will be found to be outside the city—a prey to the enemy, to be destroyed at his will. Until the books shall be opened, it will not be known how great is the power of family prayer, not only to keep and to bring up in the Christian faith those for whom it was originally set up, but to gather in those who would otherwise have remained aliens and outcasts from the congregation of the righteous. Many years ago the writer learned of a little girl who would stop on her way to school at the house of a schoolmate to be present at morning prayers, led by that schoolmate's father. The name of the good man has passed from memory, but the child, now an elderly woman, and her family are living monuments of the faith learned there.

Another instance came within the writer's knowledge while traveling in the Tennessee mountains. The colored driver of the hack, speaking of the gentleman at whose house we had been staying, asked, "Does Mr. C. still read his book?"

"What book?"

"The Bible. Does he still gather his family together every morning and evening, and read and pray?"

"Oh, yes; but how did you know it?"

"Why, you see, I went there once with my hack for a gentleman who was visiting them, and I had to stay all night, and he sent his little boys to the kitchen to bring me into prayers. I had never thought much about getting religion, but after that I never rested till I got it."

These are but two of numerous instances, "for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap."

There are other tabernacles of which the Holy Spirit will show the need, if we, being willing in the day of his power, will heed the command, "On the first day of the first month shalt thou set up the tabernacle."

Fly away, my carrier-dove!
A loving message give
To every home, both far and near,
Where little people live.

DEAR CHILDREN: For four years now this little carrier-dove has nestled under folded wings, and I send her forth to-day bearing a Christmas greeting to you, one and all. I hope she will be welcomed by many of you that used to watch her coming in "The Mississippi White Ribbon." This time she comes tapping at the door of your heart, bearing the olive branch of peace and good will, and to tell you of some beautiful, useful work to do.

Our twin-sister, the North Mississippi Conference, has a "Baby Roll" in the Parsonage and Home Mission work, and I think it is such a beautiful idea that I want to open one in our Conference, for I am quite sure there are no lovelier, sweeter flock of roly-poly babies in all the world than are in the Mississippi Conference.

The rule of membership is as follows: All children admitted under four years of age; membership fee, one dollar. This entitles the baby to a certificate of membership and enrollment. The fund thus raised will be used in helping to build homes for the dear little babies that make so sweet a part of the parsonage homes throughout the Christian world.

Now, my little friends, don't you everyone want your own home baby's name on our roll? If you haven't got as many nickles as you will need, I am sure papa and mamma and baby's admiring friends will be glad to help you make up your dollar.

Christmas is coming to you, because one Baby came to live on earth, and I want to tell you about his coming. The angels from heaven, with the glory of the Lord shining round about them, told the shepherds that were watching their flocks at night that the Babe of Bethlehem had come to earth to be their Savior; and, hanging right over the manger where the Baby lay, there shone the brightest star that ever gleamed in any sky, and is known as the Star of Bethlehem. The wisest men of earth came long, weary miles to bring their greetings and their gifts to welcome the Baby, whom an angel of the Lord named Jesus, and Christmas is his birthday; is why you hang up your stockings, and are so happy over what Santa Claus brings. You are blessed with Christian parents, happy homes, and all other blessings, because the Christ child came to live in our world. There are many children elsewhere that have never heard this beautiful story, and we must do all we can to build homes where preachers can go and tell them about their Savior who said, "Suffer the children to come unto me, for of such is the kingdom of heaven."

In connection with the "Baby Roll," we will open a memorial list for the names of babies who have joined the "angel-band," thus giving parents an opportunity of perpetuating in the memory of their little ones in this beautiful way.

At your earliest convenience send the names, with date of birth, with registration fee, to my address (Jackson, Miss.), and the same shall be acknowledged through our column in the ADVOCATE, and a certificate of membership will be sent to the baby.

Happy Christmas to you all!

Your friend,

MRS. R. R. PARKER.

During the Annual Conference which convened in Greenville, Miss., Dr. Lambuth, of our Missionary Board, preached in the M. E. Church, Saturday night, to a large and attentive congregation. Mrs. J. B. Stone was with us during Conference, and our district secretary, Mrs. G. C. Jones, was here one day also. We made an effort to have a called meeting of our auxiliary, but the time was so taken up with Conference that we failed. I see so often some one asking "how to make a missionary meeting interesting;" and I would like to tell of a "missionary tea" the ladies had here last month. Questions on missionary work and answers were written on paper and numbered; then the questions, with their numbers, were written on small cards, placed in a basket, and handed around, each person taking out a card; then one at a time would ask the question on her card, and if she could, would answer; and if not, anyone in the room could answer. The questions all pertaining to mission work, such as: "Who was the mother of 'woman's work' in the South?" "Give a sketch of Miss E. E. Holding's life." "Who is Miss Lochie Rankin, and where stationed?" etc. It proved very interesting and instructive. The question will arise whether any one historic name can cover humanity's need. It is said of a certain Roman general that he knew every soldier in his army by name. We should know every laborer in the mission fields by name, and also by disposition and qualification. Literary clubs have papers most carefully prepared; attendance at them is regular; yet our missionary meetings have few. Why this difference? Is the inspiration of Browning superior to that of St. John, or Shakespeare loftier in thought than Moses, Job, or Daniel? We can make our meetings attractive and interesting. There is no reason why a mission paper should not have as much grace of language and vigor of thought as the paper of a literary club.

The memory of Conference lingers with us like a sweet perfume, while we are saddened by having to give up Rev. T. G. Ramsey, our pastor for three years. He leaves many true friends in Greenville, and in the hearts of his people there will always be a warm welcome for himself and family.

Our home was cheered during Conference by the presence of a young minister who returned to Vandorbilt—Rev. J. B. Mitchell—who presented us on leaving Bishop Galloway's new book, "Modern Missions," which is an instructive and interesting volume.

Selections.

The quality of our church membership is more vitally important than large Sabbath audiences. There has been much discussion of late about the attendance upon divine worship on the Lord's day, but too little concern appears about the spirituality, life and character of those who frequent his sanctuary. A hundred good working, faithful, consistent and zealous Christians are of greater worth to Christ and his cause than a congregation of a thousand nominal Christians. What is most wanted to-day is church members upon whom we can depend for service—men and women who will commend the religion which they profess, upon every occasion, who will make sacrifices for their Master, who delight in the prayer meeting and in the morning and evening services of the house of God, who are always finding something to do, who believe in standing by the pastor and older, and who love the truth as it is in Jesus. The more we have of such Christians, the better is it for the cause of Christ. A church composed of such material will be powerful and aggressive in country, town or city, whether its members be few or many.—Presbyterian.

Are you questioning what course in life you shall take? Let love tell you. Love is the only prophet, love is the only teacher. Love will answer all problems, because God is love and love is God. We are in this world like a child who plays upon the floor with a disintegrated map, which she does not know how to put together. Here is some father-love and here some mother-love, and here some brother-love, and here some wife-love; here some love that is wrathful against wrong, and here some love that is beautiful with suffering, and here some love that is merciful and compassionate toward the sinful—love all broken up in fragments. Put them together; take your life for this task and put them together; and when all the fragments of life are put together you will find the map is love, for life is God, and God is love.—Lyman Abbott.

The hopeless man can not be a joyful man. He may not be entirely destitute of any sort of joy, but he certainly can not be full of joy and hopeless at the same time. This is true in relation to material matters as it is emphatically true in relation to spiritual concerns. Despair and sorrow fill the man who has lost hope of success in his business; but let hope revive, and joy is at once born out of his hope. And the sinner without any true hope in Christ, has no real joy; but as soon as Christ is formed within him, "the hope of glory," a new and high joy is born into his heart. And a Christian, full of hope, is also full of joy.

You want to be true, and you are trying to be. Learn two things—never to be discouraged because good things get on slowly here, and never to fail daily to do that good which lies next your hand. Do not be in a hurry, but be diligent. Enter into that sublime patience of the Lord.—George Macdonald.

Love can be increased by judicious culture, as wild fruits may double their bearings under the hand of a gardener; and love can dwindle and die out by neglect, as choice flower seeds planted in poor soil dwindle and grow single.—Selected.

Life has two surprises. In youth one is surprised that he knows so much. When he has reached maturer life he is surprised that there are so many things that he doesn't know.—Selected.

The moral courage that will face obloquy in a good cause is a much rarer gift than the bodily valor that will confront death in a bad one.—Exchange.

If you find yourself becoming ungrateful, look around and see how much better off you are than other people.

A skeptic is a man who closes all the windows, and then blames God because he has to live in the dark.

To Whom It May Concern:

About three years ago I received a sample bottle of "Mul-en-ol." I had never heard of it before. I began using it, however, as occasion required, and soon found that it was all that is claimed for it, and more. For cuts, burns, bruises, scalds, and all kinds of sores, it is superior to any remedy I have ever used. It is also exceedingly efficacious in colic and diarrhœa. For sore throat it is incomparably better than anything I know of. I heartily recommend it as a medicine worthy of a place in every household. W. C. BLACK,
Editor Christian Advocate.

It has been demonstrated beyond doubt that Catarrhal Deafness can be and is being permanently cured in thousands of cases by the use of the new discovery and invention known as "Aerial Medication." This treatment is based on purely scientific principles, and has received the highest endorsement from the medical profession, and has been used with phenomenal success in over twelve thousand cases in this country alone. Those of our readers who know persons afflicted with deafness are urged to send the names and address of such persons to Dr. J. H. Moore, Cincinnati, O., a reputable physician of the highest professional and moral standing, and he will send full particulars and medicine for three months' treatment free.

Letter from "Gilderoy."

From Black Hawk to Minter City is fifty miles—twenty-two by dirt road and twenty-eight by rail. This trip we made by wagon and by rail at a cost of $14 50. We once had a fairly full supply of household and kitchen furniture to be hauled from place to place; but as parsonages increased and began to be supplied with furniture, we began to dispose of everything that could not be boxed or baled, so that moving is now, comparatively, a small matter. We can be up and off on short notice. Here we are all inside of one week as comfortable as we ever have been in a ministry of thirty eight years.

Minter City is a misnomer, for it is not a city, only in length and in name. It is wanting in breadth, thickness and population. The town is a string of houses a mile long on the bank of the Tallahatchie river. I can stand on the front porch of the parsonage and toss a stone into the river. Steamboats pass every day. The "mistress of the manse" persists in calling the river a street, and says, "There goes a boat up or down the street," as the case may be. Though born on the bank of the Tombigbee, she has not lived on or near a river since. She will have to learn riparian phrase. It is new speech to her.

This is a magnificent country, and in fifty years nearly all of it will be under cultivation. Along the railroads and along the river and bayou fronts it is nearly all under cultivation now. In a few years there will be fine, flowing artesian wells everywhere. This will solve the water problem and, largely, the health problem in this malarious region. Such fine water as is obtained here by boring artesian wells you never saw before. You ought to go to Greenwood and take a drink of it. We have a beautiful church here and a fine-looking congregation. I have not seen a sickly looking person, white or black, male or female, since I came down the hill into Yazoo Swamp. Indeed, the people here weigh all the way up from one twenty-five to three hundred and seventy-five. They call this "malarial puff." I get much sympathy here for my cadaverous looks. They tell me I will grow fleshly and have the wrinkles smoothed out of my hide. When that comes to pass I will hardly know myself. The prospects and possibilities of this country are beyond all computation. This wide bottom will come to be one great wilderness of cotton and corn—the Egypt of this hemisphere and the Nile of America.

The good people have received us cordially, and they have piled in provisions enough of all kinds to last us well on into 1897. I have never had any but good appointments from the first; but in some respects this is the best appointment I ever had, and I am delighted with my home. The pastors here have wrought well, and they have all left the odor of good names behind them. Our Methodism is here what it has been everywhere, a power for good.

Yesterday I was up the river six miles at Phillip, a mill plant of immense proportions, a sort of eighth wonder to a man from the post oaks of the prairies and the black jacks of the hills. I could but look and wonder at the improvement made in machinery in the period of my short life. We used to saw lumber by hand with a whip saw and then we had the sash saw and the peck saw. Later on we had the circular saw, and now we have the band saw, a belt of steel over pulleys that "out saw all the saws I ever saw saw in Arkansaw." Who knows what will come next? That machinery up there works like it had intelligence, sensibility and will—it is these applied. As we are ready for it our Lord allows us to lay our hands on all the forces of nature and to turn them to good account. All these forces belong to him, and he holds them in reserve for us. The wonder is that we have lived so long and learned so little of the forces and conveniences that lie next to us on every side. We have been slow of understanding in nature as well as in grace. If we grow in grace and in the knowledge and love of God, the next half century will show us wonders we never dreamed of before. A Father's heart and a Father's hand will give us all things if we are only loving and dutiful sons and daughters of God. We are fellow-heirs with Christ in the vast possessions purchased with his blood. GILDEROY.

Minter City, Miss.

FROM THE WORK.

Rev. N. J Roberts, P C., Franklinton, La., Dec. 21, 1896: "We reached our new home, in the little town of Franklinton, on the seventeenth, and found quite a number of the good people at the parsonage who had prepared for us a warm supper, and gave us such a warm reception that made us feel at home at once. The parsonage is well furnished, and the needed steps are being taken to make all the improvements necessary to give us a comfortable home. We expect to make a close canvass for the dear old ADVOCATE. We need its weekly visits in every home."

Rev. M. H. Moore: "We are now comfortably domiciled in our new parsonage home at this place. The parsonage is nice, new and roomy. It is one of the best in the Natchez district. It is a creditable monument to the efforts of the former pastor, Rev. B. S. Rayner, and the good people on the Centreville circuit. The town of Centreville shows signs of thrift. New buildings are constantly being erected. The church also shows signs of a forward move. The officials and leading men on this work seem disposed to put Centreville along with our best appointments. Our people gave us a cordial reception. The ladies were thoughtful to adjust things nicely at the parsonage, and had a nice warm dinner awaiting our arrival."

Rev. W. C. Harris, Friar's Point, Miss., Dec. 18: "At the recent session of the North Mississippi Conference I was, as 'Gilderoy' once put it, 'taken on the point of the Bishop's pen and thrown' from Corinth to Friar's Point. Three hundred yards further, and I would have fallen in the Mississippi river. Well, we had two exceedingly pleasant years at Corinth; learned to love the people very much, and had the satisfaction of knowing we were loved in return. We felt that our labors there had been blessed of the Lord, and, in hope of doing a better work than we had done, would gladly have remained another year—But these facts did not prevent our coming cheerfully to our new charge. The good people here captured us at the very start. We found a month's supply of nearly all necessary eatables in the pantry—more than a month's supply of some articles—a ton and a half of coal and stove-wood for several weeks. All this is to be appreciated more, because of its being done, not on account of any feeling for us personally, we being strangers, but for our 'work's sake.' We have been here a little more than a week, and I think we never before felt so much at home with a people in so short a time Under the blessings of God, we hope to do a good year's work."

SILVER WEDDING.

On Dec. 5, from 7 till 9 P. M., the members of our church at Baton Rouge celebrated the twenty-fifth anniversary of our pastor's wedding. The reception was given by the Ladies' Aid Society, and was held in the Sunday-school rooms, which had been decorated in flowers and evergreens by the Epworth League.

Bro. Singleton, with that bright smile so charcteristic of his lovable, sympathetic nature, and his dear wife received their friends at the door, where congratulations were extended. A few talks were made, after which the Epworth League served every one present with cake and chocolate.

Several handsome presents in silver were received, among which was a silk bag containing twenty five dollars from the Ladies' Aid Society. At about 9 in the evening the reception ended, everyone expressing himself and herself as having had a most delightful time.

Conference has seen fit to take our dear pastor from us; but we pray God's blessing upon him and his loved ones for aye. We have had him with us but a year; yet in that time our church has been strengthened; our people, more closely drawn together, have done greater work for the Master's kingdom, and hearts have been filled with the "peace which passeth all understanding." Of course, we recognize the fact that this has been the work of the Holy Spirit, yet his earnest and ever faithful servant, Bro. Singleton, has daily been an example to us of the Christ-like character of gentleness, helpfulness, sympathy and love.

Death and disease are no respecters of persons. The young are taken as well as the old. Carelessness of health, transgression of Nature's laws, and hereditary influences are continually digging pitfalls. Apparently strong, healthy young people start downhill every day. They lose health and life just when the possibilities of life seem greatest. Some slight disorder, carelessly neglected, is reinforced by other kindred troubles. Indigestion, indicated by sourness of the stomach, flatulency, heartburn, and distress after eating, are followed by disordered liver, constipation, headaches, kidney disease, loss of appetite, nervousness, debility and loss of flesh. Loss of flesh prepares the way for the most serious consequences. Weakness from any cause is an invitation to consumption. The germs of consumption are in the air and in our food—in the water we drink. They are everywhere. But they are harmless to the perfectly healthy body. It is only when the body is weak that they do any harm. Prompt measures should be taken at the first indication of disease. When indigestion shows itself in any form it calls for the immediate use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. This wonderful medicine is an invigorating tonic for the whole system. It purifies and enriches the blood and searches out the disease germs wherever they may be in the body. It builds up firm, solid, healthy, useful flesh. It strengthens the nerves, stimulates the appetite, makes digestion and nutrition perfect and brings sound, refreshing sleep. The marvelous success of this truly wonderful medicine has brought into existence scores of imitations.

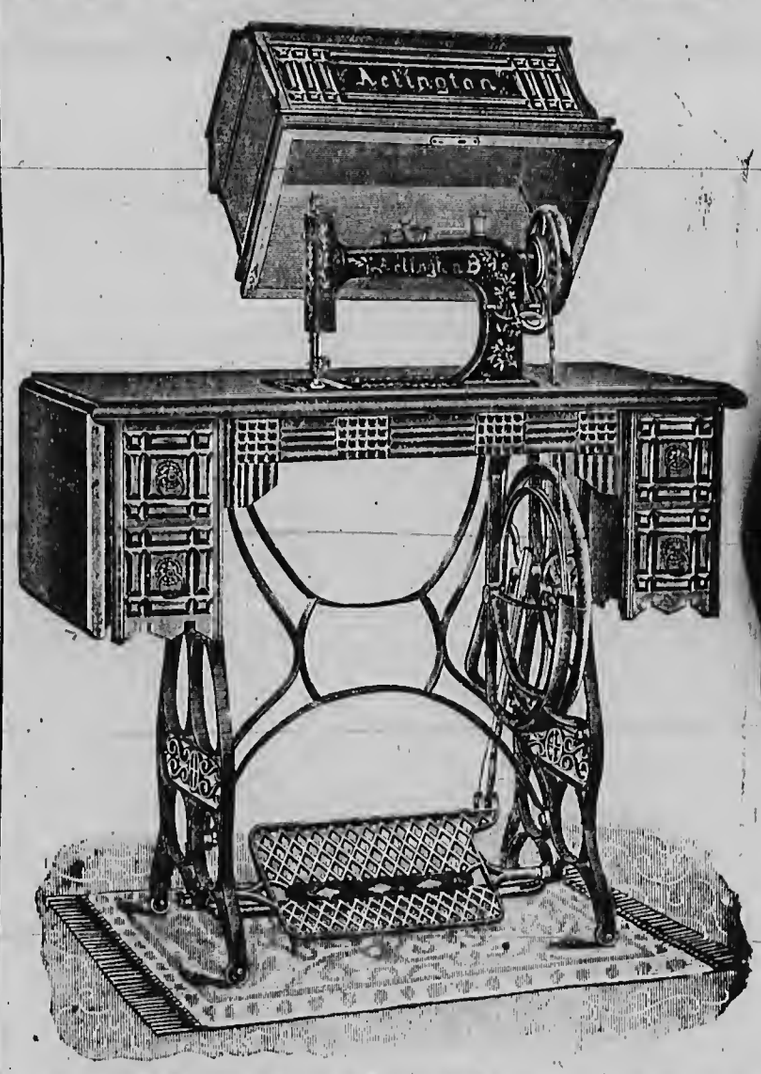
Our Machine Offer.

New Improved High-Arm "Arlington B" Self-Threading Swing Machine.



A recorded certificate of warranty for 10 years accompanies each machine. The "Arlington B" is complete in every detail, combining all modern and late improvements, such as automatic bobbin winder, self-threading shuttle, self-setting needle, tipper spring tension, etc.

The "Arlington B" self-threading sewing machine has a large high arm, its mechanical appearance is perfect, its adjustment is absolute, positive take up, convenient foot-rest, with the best style furniture, either oak or walnut; in addition to which each machine is furnished with the best steel combination attachments free, as follows: One tucker, one foot ruffler, one set of plain hemmers (five different widths up to seven-eighths of an inch), one blinder, one shirring plate and one under-braider, packed in a handsome velvet lined case. It is also furnished with one foot hemmer, one screw driver, one wrench, one oil can with oil, one gauge, one package of needles, six bobbins and one instruction book.

THE HEAD is strong and substantial; has large space under the arm for handling bulky goods, is finely japanned, and protected by a hard finish. Has so few bearings and frictious points that it is easily oiled and kept clean.

NEEDLE BAR is round, with adjustable bearings polished and fitted, insuring great wear, and can run a long time without oiling. It has a slack dip motion, relieving the strain upon the thread when the shuttle is passing through the loop. Using the adjustable take-up, controlling the threads perfectly on all grades of work.

IMPROVED AUTOMATIC BOBBIN WINDER which is so positive and reliable in its action that an imperfectly wound bobbin is an impossibility. So simple that a child can easily operate it. This valuable attachment renders possible a perfect control of shuttle tension.

SELF-THREADING—THE "ARLINGTON B" is self-threading, requiring no change from light to heavy work. Uses one needle thread, and makes the lock stitch.

THE NEEDLE is the same as used on the New Home machine, and is self-setting both as to height and position with reference to shuttle, with short blade and long shank, insuring great strength; finely polished.

SELF-THREADING SHUTTLE—A perfect steel cylinder shuttle with delicate and perfect tension, open at one end to allow the bobbin to be inserted without displacing any of the parts; runs loose in the shell without spring centre or point bearings, thus insuring an even tension; can be threaded in the dark, and easily understood.

LOOSE PULLEY for winding the bobbin without running the machine requires no change of adjustment, nor is it necessary to remove the work from the machine.

PARTS SUBJECT TO WEAR are made of the finest steel, case hardened, light and noiseless, and are very durable.

Thursday, December 31, 1896.

Hope oils the machinery of the intellect and toughens the fibre of the will.

Whether your life is worth living or not depends upon how much love you put into it.

"Husks" indeed are the pleasures of sin to the soul that has tasted of the Bread of Life.

Endeavor so to live that your daily life may commend our holy Christianity to those with whom you come in contact.

A coward can do a seemingly heroic thing when all the world is looking at him; but only a brave man can do it when there are no witnesses.

The cardinal principle of gymnastics is that every faculty is strengthened by exercise. Apply this to your spiritual life by lifting the burden from the shoulders of your over-burdened neighbor, and see what the result will be.

In your associations with even the best people, if you look for faults, you will surely find them. But what good will that do you? Wouldn't it afford you more pleasure and be better every way to watch carefully for good traits—excellencies of character? Try it.

Afflictions are intended for your good. Whether they really benefit you or not depends largely upon yourself. Just as prosperity may prove a curse instead of a blessing, so with adversity. Free agency counts for something at every point along life's pathway.

In the conceit of an usurped infallibility you may sit in the high places and rail at those who are truer saints of God than you; but by so doing, however loudly, your partisans may sound your praises, you will but have hindered the work of God. Your work will be foredoomed to worthlessness and sterility. You will have done far more harm by your narrow bitterness than you fancy yourself to have done good by your "uncompromising orthodoxy." You may be forgiven, because you have done it ignorantly; but your work will be as chaff in the consuming fire.—Farrar.

Our Debt.

We ardently hope that the articles by our correspondent, "Lysias," concerning our missionary debt, will bear fruit. That debt ought to be paid. We believe it can be paid. We believe that now is as good a time to pay it as we are likely to have for years to come. Let our leading men speak out on the subject.

The Woman's Foreign Missionary Society.

The present has been denominated "Woman's Century," and the designation is peculiarly appropriate. Today woman's influence is more potent, more widely extended and more beneficent than in any former age. This is no less true in the church of God than in other realms of human activity. Never was woman so important a factor in church life as she is to-day. It is true that she who "was last at the cross and first at the sepulchre" has been from the beginning active in the service of her Divine Lord; but never until the present age was it permitted unto her to exert her energies through organizations under her own control.

One of the mightiest and most beneficent of these organizations is the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society. Our own church did not have the honor to originate this organization, but it did have the sagacity to follow quickly in the footsteps of those progressive churches which first laid hold upon this mighty arm of ecclesiastical power. This organization came into being "in the fullness of time." Any attempt in this direction in any former age would have been an anachronism foredoomed to failure. The spectacle of many thousands of women scattered over a continent banding themselves together for the purpose of propagating the gospel of Christ among the nations of heathendom through the instrumentality of missionaries of their own sex is one which no former age could have endured. Preparatory to this it was necessary that through the benign influence of Christianity upon the civilization of the world woman should be emancipated from the thralldom of ages. Coetaneous with this preparatory work in our own heaven favored land Divine Providence was making equally needful preparation in the dark realms of Paganism. Through the agency of the wives of our missionaries it was being demonstrated that there is work to be done in Pagan lands which woman can do more efficiently than man—yea, rather work which man can not do at all.

The results of this work in our own church have been highly gratifying. Beginning only eighteen years ago, this society has during this brief period grown to a membership of 73,000. Its revenues for the last fiscal year were over $90,000. It has more than forty missionaries at work in China, Mexico, and Brazil. It owns a considerable amount of property and maintains a number of educational institutions which are doing magnificent work for the kingdom of Christ. Its fiscal operations are conducted with enviable skill, its cardinal principle of finance being to "owe no man anything but love." The spiritual results have been still more gratifying whether we consider the sheaves gathered for the Master's garner in the distant mission fields or the quickening influence upon the piety of the church at home. We hope that during the present year it may have a large increase in numerical strength, in pecuniary resources, in working force and in spiritual power. That there is vast room for growth is evident when it is remembered that only about one-tenth of our church women belong to this society.

Making History.

It is a time-honored custom in this city to make appropriations out of the city treasury for the maintenance of sectarian institutions, most of them being, as a matter of course, under the auspices of the Roman Catholic Church. Though this policy has been adversely criticised, yet, so far as we know, no serious attempt has hitherto been made to bring about a change. Recently, however, legal proceedings were instituted by Henry Orr, Sr., to restrain the municipal government from paying out any money for the support of these sectarian institutions. The occasion of the suit is the closing of the public schools during the month of December for lack of funds. Mr. Orr shows that the amount of money paid to these sectarian institutions is sufficient to keep the schools going. He avers that these appropriations to sectarian institutions are in violation of the Constitution. The public awaits the decision of the courts with intense interest. We are in hearty sympathy with Mr. Orr. The appropriation of public money for the support of sectarian institutions, whether Catholic or Protestant, is a great wrong. A decision of the courts in favor of this policy will not change our opinion on the subject. Any church which can not maintain its institutions without aid from the State deserves to go down.

Not Extinct.

In our Savior's day there were those who followed him not for spiritual instruction, but for "the loaves and fishes" he supplied. This tribe is not extinct. There are persons whose membership in the church is wholly due to some temporal benefit which they hope to reap from it—pecuniary, social or otherwise. And the sacred robes of friendship are donned in the same serdid spirit. So long as they can use you as a stepping-stone, these people are gushing in their demonstrations of friendship; but when you can no longer serve them in that capacity, their ardor cools below the point of congelation. The poet evidently thought this tribe numerous when he wrote:

"The friends who in our sunshine live,
When Winter comes have flown;
And he who has but tears to give,
Must weep those tears alone."

Such people are incapable of true friendship. The use of the word upon their lips is a profanation. Blessed is he whose friends are of a different sort.

We find in an exchange the following definition of the word "friend." If there is a better one on record, we have not seen it: "The first person who comes in when the whole world goes out."

Charity Organization Society.

This society has been formed to succeed "The Conference of Charities." It is to furnish a means of systematic communication between the charitable institutions of New Orleans of all denominations, and its objects and plan of work are as follows:

First—To protect the community from the imposture of mendicants.

Second—To reduce vagrancy and pauperism, and to ascertain their true causes.

Third—To prevent indiscrimination and duplicate giving.

Fourth—To see that all deserving cases of destitution are properly relieved.

Fifth—To make employment the basis of relief.

Sixth—To elevate the home-life, health and habits of the poor.

Seventh—To prevent children growing up as paupers.

When sufficient funds are assured by enlarged membership, means will be organized for furnishing employment for those found to be worthy of assistance, such as provident wood yards, etc., for men, and sewing rooms, laundries, etc., for women.

We solicit your aid in this work and ask you to join our society. The annual dues have been fixed at $6 a year for men, and $3 a year for women, payable quarterly if desired.

Those wishing to join the society are requested to write to either Mr. H. Heyman, secretary, corner St. Charles and Potors avenues, or Mr. H. Meader, treasurer, No. 140 Carondelet street. Respectfully, (Signed) Paul Capdeville, W. W. Carre, H. D. Forsyth, M. Heyman, Gab. Kahn, J. Watts Kearney, Clarence F. Low, H. Meader, T. G. Rapior, John R. Todd, Gustaf R. Westfeldt, Directors.

[We take pleasure in publishing the above appeal. This organization is one that should commend itself to philanthropic people of every creed. Similar organizations have wrought wonders in many of the cities of this great republic. Such an organization is sorely needed in this city. Surely no good citizen can fail to approve its purposes as announced above, and the more familiar one is with sociological conditions in this city the more fully will he appreciate the importance of every item in the plan.—EDITOR.]

Bishop Galloway's New Book.

Of Bishop Galloway's new book, "Modern Missions: Their Evidential Value," Dr. W. F. Tillett, of the Vanderbilt University, writes appreciatively in the Nashville Advocate. As is well known, this volume contains the lectures on the Cole Foundation delivered before the faculty and students of Vanderbilt University and the citizens of Nashville last May. Dr. Tillett says:

It was my privilege and pleasure to listen to these lectures when they were delivered by the gifted and eloquent lecturer last May. They showed careful preparation on the part of the speaker. A wide and discriminating reading in the whole range of missionary literature, and careful observation in missionary travels, were everywhere manifest in the development of his great theme. These lectures were delivered with an earnestness and eloquence that commanded the closest attention of the cultured audiences that listened to them. They were, however, not mere extemporaneous addresses, but carefully-written papers on the various and important topics discussed, and they were prepared more with reference to publication in book form than for the purposes of mere oral delivery. Great as were the ends served by their delivery to appreciative audiences at the Vanderbilt University and in the city of Nashville, their value is even greater in this printed form. I find them even more entertaining and instructive in reading them than in listening to them.

The time was when the church engaged in the work of foreign missions because it believed in the divine character of the Christian religion, and because this work was included in the divine commission. That was the time of seed sowing and planting. Now the church believes in the divine character of the Christian religion because of the results of the work of foreign missions—that is, the success of modern missions has become one of the strongest credentials of the Christian religion. If the influence of Christianity in the world and its beneficient and uplifting effects upon individuals, communities, and nations, are evidences of its divine character, surely the grand and triumphant results of modern missions must be given an important place among the credentials of Christianity. This is the great theme that was given to the lecturer to develop, and he has used his rich and abundant material admirably to establish his point. It is the most thoughtful and able product that has come from Bishop Galloway's pen. Let every one of our preachers read this volume, and get its grand thoughts into his mind, and more inspiring missionary sermons and increased missionary collections will be the speedy result. By all means let every young preacher buy and read this uplifting volume; it will serve to pitch his ministry on a high plane of intelligent and enthusiastic missionary work. All the preachers of our church should buy each of the Cole Lectures as it comes from the press. These biennial volumes are destined in the course of time to constitute the finest library of Christian literature that will emanate from our Southern Methodist press. The first of these lectures, "The Witnesses to Christ," by Bishop A. W. Wilson, is still to be had; but after a few years it will be impossible to secure back numbers, as only a limited number is published.

A Railroad Horror.

A horrible railroad wreck occurred last Sunday morning near Birmingham, Ala. Concerning it the Picayune, of Monday, speaks as follows:

Yesterday morning, at an early hour, a passenger train on a branch line running to the mines near Birmingham went through the central span of a bridge over Cahawba river, and, wrecking the bridge, carried down to death, perhaps, thirty or more persons.

The train leaped down about one hundred feet, dealing destruction so effectually that but few of the people on board were saved alive, and they were all badly hurt. The broken cars took fire at once, and all the combustible material that was not submerged in the river burned to ashes. Many of the ill-fated passengers who were not immediately killed, and who were caught under the debris, were burned alive before help could get to them.

The horrors of the situation are greatly aggravated by the belief, for which there seem good grounds, that the wreck was premeditated and accomplished by some human fiend, who had intentionally displaced a rail of the track over the highest part of the bridge. It may seem wonderful how any human being could deliberately murder a train-load of passengers, either for the purpose of robbery, or in order to secure revenge against the railroad company or one of its servants.

These criminals should be punished with death with the least possible delay should they happen to escape popular indignation.

In the Living Present.

M. Cecil de Thierry, the learned Frenchman, who recently visited the United States, says in Contemporary Review, that Americans, as a rule, make burials a hollow mockery. Not only superfluous pomp and showy parade, but even the corpses are extravagantly attired. The preparation of said corpses expensive and elaborate. Rice powder and rouge used in superabundance, etc.

The kissing of corpses when about to be buried is very dangerous. Deadly bacteria are frequently communicated. Parents should not permit their infants to be kissed by every admirer. Female osculation at meeting and parting of female friends in a pernicious custom. Germs of various diseases are thus transmitted. Mustaches are said to be regular bacilli menageries.

Ian Maclaren (Dr. Watson, of Scotland) recently said in his lectures to the students at Yale College, that, though, he could deliver two lectures a day, he had never been able to preach more than one sermon in twenty-four hours. Exhaustion prevented impartation of the necessary afflatus. The reflection that some of his hearers might listen to the Word of Life for the last time operated crushingly on his physical make-up. He warned the young preachers against the prevalent "scattering." A sermon should not be an encyclopedia, but a monograph—an agency of pushing one article, not a store where you can purchase anything from a button to a coffin.

Forts are now being armed with powerful magnets. Some of them deflect the approaching bullet, which otherwise might have caused destruction, fully twelve yards. Exact aim on the part of attacking war-vessels proves useless. A new method of infantry tactics is for an advancing column to stoop and exercise rapid progress on hands and foot. At a given command all rise and give fire, etc.

A New York firm manufactures "tailor-made costumes for the dead." The firm employs artists in designing the same. It issues illustrated catalogues of its fashionable product. Another firm manufactures and sells nothing but dog attire. Dog overcoats are advertised, costing only ten dollars.

The Ministerial Association of New York, composed of all Protestant denominations, recently discussed "The Ideal Newspaper." Said one of the speakers: The ideal newspaper will not be issued until we have an ideal Christian people—in fact, not until the millennium comes. The paper reflects the moral tone of the public. Another disagreed. Said he, the papers were responsible for the moral deterioration of the public. Their sensational utterances had debauched the people, and stunted and ruined their moral sense. Sensational papers should not be supported, etc.

Prof. Moulton, of the Chicago University, publishes translations from the Bible in little volumes of lyrics. Critics commend. The little books are eagerly purchased on railroad-trains and at news-stands. We give an extract:

"How long will thou sleep, O sluggard?
When will thou arise from thy sleep?
Yet a little sleep,
A little slumber,
A little folding of the hands in sleep.
But thus poverty will come to thee as a robber,
And want will draw nigh as an armed man."

ICH DIEN.

A New Book.

TWELVE SERMONS. By Bishop John C. Granbery, D. D. Price, $1.

This is a beautiful book, well bound in cloth; large, clear type. The subjects treated are as follows: "Grace Abounding over Sin," "Glorying Only in the Lord," "The Inward Struggle," "The Offending Eye," "Washing the Hands and Compassing the Altar," "Broken Cisterns," "Lord of Hosts and God of Jacob," "The Strong One Armed," "The Stronger Than Satan," "Faith and Works," "Unity of Revelation."

The distinguished author has here given to the public the cream of his pulpit work. Not only from the standpoint of homiletics, but also from that of a heart hungering after righteousness, these sermons are excellent. We bespeak for the work an extensive circulation.

It will be remembered that Bishop Keane was recently deposed from the rectorship of the Catholic University in Washington. In that church everybody is supposed to bow in blind submission to the will of the Pope. In this instance, we learn that the Bishop's friends in the Catholic Church have started a fund to be given for the support of Bishop Keane who has refused the appointment tendered him by the Pope. How far does this differ from a protest against the action of the Pope?—Observer.

A successful pastor points out one item of his ministerial success like this: "I threw my brain, soul, tact and enthusiasm into getting subscribers for the paper. I worked for it as I did for revivals, and on the same ground—that it was necessary for the highest success of my pastorate."—Wesleyan Advocate.

Never argue in society; give only results. If any person differs from you, bow, and turn the conversation.—Beaconsfield.

NOTES.

Rev. Henry Carre, of Vanderbilt University, is spending the holidays in the city.

Rev. Fitzgerald S. Parker preached an excellent sermon on last Sunday night at Rayne Memorial.

We were pleased to meet President Chambers, of Whitworth College, in the city during the holidays.

Rev. E. F. Edgar has received a royal welcome from the good people of his new charge. His postoffice is Barlow, Miss.

In the recent State election in Kansas twenty women were elected to the position of county superintendent of education.

The article on our second page by Rev. J. I. Hoffpanir was read before the Louisiana Conference at its recent session, and published by request of the Conference.

The United States pension roll contains the names of 3,781 ex-soldiers who now reside in foreign countries. The amount of money paid to these non-residents is $582,735.

We learn that a part, and, perhaps, all of Dr. Hunnicutt's library was consumed by the same fire that destroyed that of Bro. Holloman. A more serious loss to a preacher can scarcely be conceived of. Here is an opportunity for friendship to display itself.

It is predicted that after the fourth of March, next, the Republican party will work for the annexation of Hawaii. In anticipation of this, anti-annexation leagues are being formed all over the island, a large majority of the people, it is said, being violently opposed to the movement.

Most of the newly appointed city preachers have arrived and entered upon their work. J. F. Scurlock and P. H. Fontaine were on hand the first Sunday after Conference. Last Sunday S. S. Keener and H. W. Knickerbocker occupied their pulpits. J. F. Fester reached the city last week, but was suddenly called away. H. R. Singleton will arrive this week. The outgoing pastors have all gone to their new fields, or will have done so by the close of this week.

The New Orleans Lyceum Association is carrying on the good work begun last Winter—i. e., that of furnishing the people of this city with high-class lectures at a minimum cost. Two lectures have already been given, both by Prof. Ernest Fennolosa: subject, "Comparison of Japanese and European Art." Five other lectures will be given during the month of January by Josiah Royce, professor of philosophy in Harvard University. These lectures will be given at Newcomb Hall.

Usage proscribes an inaugural ball when President or governor is inducted into office. If the official does not indulge in the terpsichorean art, even if he is opposed to it, he is expected with his wife to head the introductory promenade, and thus give the sanction to the festivities. Governor-elect Mount, of Indiana, seems to have the Jacksonian spine. He is a Presbyterian elder, a godly man, with strong convictions of Christian propriety. He can not conscientiously participate in an inaugural ball. Therefore he will not, and that feature drops out of the Indianapolis program. We always did like the "Presbyterian true blue."—Exchange.

To be misunderstood even by those whom one loves is the cross and bitterness of life. It is the secret of that sad and melancholy smile on the lips of great men which so few understand; it is the cruelest trial reserved for self-devotion; it is what must have oftenest wrung the heart of the Son of Man; and if God could suffer, it would be the wound which should be forever inflicting upon him. He also—he above all—is the most misunderstood, the least comprehended. Alas! alas! Never tire, never to grow cold; to be patient, sympathetic, tender, to look for the budding flower and the opening heart, to hope always like God; to love always—this is duty.—Henry Frederick Amiel.

The Reviewer Reviewed.

Bro. Honnoll does not seem to be pleased with what was said about Epworth College in my report to the St. Louis Advocate. In reply he will please allow me to say that Grenada Collegiate Institute is the property of the church, and Epworth College is not. It is simply under the auspices of our church at Holly Springs. Our property at Grenada is as much the property of the church as Millsaps College is, and whenever we can equip the college with endowment and suitable scientific apparatus, we can employ the president and teachers as we do at Millsaps. For the present the Board of Trustees are doing the best they can with the college. Last year Dr. Malone did not get much salary, for after he paid his teachers, renewed the insurance, and spent $400 in repairs, there was no salary left. The church ought to equip its colleges so as to put the best educational advantages within the reach of its poorest girls. The friends of Grenada are not the enemies of Epworth, but they simply desire to state the facts. There are a number of girls who are receiving benefit, some of them large benefit, from the financial income of Grenada. No doubt the same is true of Epworth.

Day of Fasting and Prayer.

The members of the Woman's Parsonage and Home Mission Society are called upon to observe Friday, Jan. 29, '97, as a day of fasting and prayer. The need for the strict observance of this day lies in the fact that the receipts of the society are not sufficient to meet the demands of the work. It behooves each member to humble herself before God, and beseech him to move us, and all who love our cause, if we would even maintain the work already undertaken.

The special Decennial offering of $20,000 called for is indispensable to the proper development of our work and should be raised during the coming Week of Prayer. Let us, in deep humility and unwavering faith, observe this day. Let not one fail at this crucial time, lest her lack of earnestness and fidelity result in damage to the cause.

MRS. R. K. HARGROVE,
Gen. Sec.

The Nashville Christian Advocate, the general organ of our church, of the third or fourth week of January, '97, will contain four pages devoted to the interests of the Woman's Parsonage and Home Mission Society. It would be well for every member of the society to secure and preserve this copy. Its contributions will furnish material for the regular monthly meetings, and for meetings during the approaching Week of Prayer. Each auxiliary should be collecting a Home Mission Library, and in it preserve these yearly editions of the Advocate. The two issues already gotten out were March 14, '95, and April 2, '96, and contained superior articles on our work.

The Life and Epistles of Saint Paul.

BY THE REV. J. W. CONYBEARE, M. A., Late Fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge; and the Rev. J. S. Howson, D. D., Principal of the Collegiate Institute, Liverpool.

Contains 1014 large octavo pages, many fine illustrations, maps, charts, etc., is printed on the same quality of paper and is the same in size as Smith's Dictionary of the Bible, and bound in uniform style.

It eloquently portrays the early life, education, conversion, teachings, labors, travels, sufferings, perils, persecutions, and missionary career of St. Paul, thus constituting a Living Picture of the great Apostle himself and of the circumstances by which he was surrounded.

The work also embodies the results of a profound and appreciative study of the true inner life of St. Paul exhibited in his letters which delineate the motives which impelled, and the faith which sustained him in all the troubles and sorrows of his twenty years' conflict, and from which we learn what is told of Paul by Paul himself, and which will continue to live upon the lips and in the hearts of all the faithful until the final consummation of all things.

It is not an abridgement, but an exact reprint of the greatly improved "People's Edition," prepared with much care and labor, in pursuance of an original plan of both writers, "for a wider circle of readers," and differs from all other editions by the substitution of English for the Greek, Latin, and German quotations.

Dr. Howson in his preface to this edition says: "Those readers have, throughout, been kept in view who, though well educated, would not find it easy to refer to Greek or German books." "The text (he also says) is unaltered, with the exception of a slight verbal change suggested in the course of a thorough re-perusal."

The above work will be sent postpaid to any address on receipt of $1.50. Preachers who prefer to do so can easily make payment in commissions on subscriptions to ADVOCATE. Address Rev. W. C. Black, 512 Camp street, New Orleans, La.

The fact that some other matter went into the North Mississippi Conference special edition of the ADVOCATE on the pages which that Conference expected to occupy is not the fault of this office. Copy was not furnished in time, and our printers could not wait. The work of the office must go on. We do not know that anybody is to blame, but it is due to all concerned that the above facts should be stated.

I always keep a vial of the Tabules upon my dressing table, and use them with confidence whenever occasion arises. "LUCK"

BY ERON R. REXFORD.

The boy who's always wishing
That this or that might be,
But never tries his mettle,
Is the boy that's bound to see
His plans all come to failure,
His hopes end in defeat;
For that's what comes when wishing
And working fail to meet.

The boy who wishes this thing
Or that thing with a will
That spurs him on to action,
And keeps him trying still,
When effort meets with failure,
Will some day surely win;
For he works out what he wishes,
And that's where "luck" comes in!

The "luck" that I believe in
Is that which comes with work,
And no one ever finds it
Who's content to wish and shirk.
The men the world calls "lucky"
Will tell you, everyone,
That success comes not with wishing,
But by hard work, bravely done.

An Educated Ministry.

The Christian denomination which neglects to provide for an educational ministry dooms itself to weakness and insignificance. Intellectual superiority is power, and gives influence everywhere. United with piety, it gives the ministry and church controlling power in the formation of public sentiment in matters of morality and religion. If you would have an efficient ministry, select young men whom God has designed for the work; furnish their minds with discipline and knowledge; then educate them for their calling. Let them be thoroughly grounded in Christian doctrine. In order to do this, give them a critical knowledge of the Scriptures; let them learn God's teachings in the external and internal history of the church for eighteen centuries; let them receive instruction and counsel from one mature in the knowledge and experience of ministerial and pastoral duties; and let them go forth in God's name, and put on the armor which the fathers are putting off. To say that a young man can learn these things better by living with a pastor than at a seminary is like saying that one can become a better civil or military engineer by practicing the art with another than by studying mathematics. All professional education is two-sided, theoretical and practical, and the latter element is founded on the former. Both are necessary. What sort of Hebraists and biblical interpreters should we have, if our pastors, weary and exhausted with their parochial labors, were to do all the teaching? How would our young ministers be prepared to grapple with the fundamental questions which a secret or an avowed infidelity is industriously forcing upon the public attention every day? They are set for the defense as well as the proclamation of the gospel. Surely this is not a time in which the church can dispense with heavy artillery, when that of the enemy is pointed against her from every hill top. Who are the men that now stand on the walls of Zion, with sword girded on, and spear and shield in hand? Who are the chosen champions of the church, and the defenders of your faith? Who translate your Scriptures, write your commentaries, prepare your books, and contribute the strong articles to your reviews? Who discuss the fundamental religious questions of the day, both in great assemblies and in the weekly religious press? There is but one answer—the ripest scholars and the ablest men that can be found. The labors of this class of men, their power of working in centers of influence with superior energy, and of diffusing sound views of truths with masterly skill, can not be dispensed with.—Barnas Sears.

Putting Heart in It.

The customer was a prudent matron from the country, careful in her shopping.

"It is a very pretty piece of goods," she said, "and just the color I want; but I am afraid it will not wash."

One of the shop girls behind the counter bowed indifferently and turned away. The other said eagerly: "Are you going to another part of the store, madam? For it is my lunch hour, and I will take a sample to the basement and wash and dry it for you before you come back."

The color of the fabric proved to be fast, and the customer bought it, and asked the name of the obliging shop girl.

A year afterwards she was again in the same store and on inquiry learned that the girl was at the head of the department.

"She put as much life into her work as ten other women," said the manager.

One of the most prominent business men of New York once said: "I have always kept a close watch on my employees, and availed myself of any hint which would show me which of them possessed the qualities requisite for success for themselves and usefulness to me. One day, when I was passing the window of the counting-room, I observed that the moment the clock struck six all the clerks, with but one exception, laid down their pens, though in the middle of a sentence, and took up their hats. One man alone continued writing. The others soon passed out of the door.

"'Pettit,' said one, 'has waited to finish his paper as usual.'

"'Yes, I called to him to come on, but he said if this was his own business he would finish the paper before he stopped work.'

"'The more fool he! I would not work for a company as for myself.'

"The men caught sight of me and stopped talking, but after that I kept my eye on Pettit, who worked after hours on my business 'because he would have done it on his own,' and he is now my junior partner."

The success of a young man or woman, in any work or profession, depends largely on the spirit which he or she puts into it. Many good workmen, who are faithful to the letter of their contract with their employers, remain salesmen or bookkeepers until they are gray headed, while others pass over them and become heads of establishments of their own. To the first class their employment is only so much work for so much wages; they "have no heart in it;" to the second, according to the old significant phrase, it is an outlet for all their own energy and ambition.

An engine, perfectly finished and competent for its work, and no fire in it, is a fit type for the first class; the same engine with its steam up, rushing along the track, of the second.

Be sure that you are able for your work and on the right track; then don't spare the steam.—Youth's Companion.

Prof. John Stuart Blackie's Words.

The nobility of life is work. We live in a working world. The idle and lazy man does not count in the plan of campaign. "My father worketh hitherto and I work." Let that text be enough. Let your daily wisdom of life be in making a good use of the opportunities given you.

We live in a real and a solid and truthful world. In such a world only truth, in the long run, can hope to prosper. Therefore avoid lies, mere show and sham and hollow superficiality of all kinds, which is at best a painted lie. Let whatever you are, and whatever you do, grow out of a firm root of truth and a strong soil of reality.

Never forget Paul's sentence: "Love is the fulfilling of the law." That is the steam of the social machine.

Do one thing well; "be a whole man," as Chancellor Thurlow said, "do one thing at a time. Make clean work and leave no tags. Allow no delays when you are at a thing. Do it and be done with it."

Avoid miscellaneous reading. Read nothing that you do not care to remember, and remember nothing you do not mean to use.

Never desire to appear clever and make a parade of your talents before men. Be honest, loving, kindly and sympathetic in all you say and do. Cleverness will flow from you naturally if you have it; and applause will come to you unsought from those who know what to applaud, but the applause of fools is to be shunned.

If "A foolish son is the heaviness of his mother," what shall be said of a foolish mother? Some one has written that there is no curse on earth worse than to have a foolish or indiscreet mother. The saying is true. The education of the rising generation rests for the first few years of life in the hands of the mothers, and foolish mothers can do more mischief and worse mischief than all the heretics in the country. A particular form of heresy goes out of style and is forgotten, but the mischief done by a foolish mother lasts during the lifetime of her children and very probably influences them and their descendants' generations after she has been forgotten.—St. Louis Advocate.

Faith in Humanity.

Never let us lose our faith in human nature, no matter how often we are deceived. Do not let deception destroy confidence in the real honesty, goodness, generosity, humanity, and friendship that exist in the world. I have lost twenty-five per cent. of all I have ever made in lending money and endorsing notes, and have incurred generally the enmity of those I have helped because I did not keep it up. But every once in a while there was somebody who did return in such full measure the credit for the help that was rendered, that faith was kept alive and the beauty and the goodness of our human nature were made evident.

I have had appointed about a thousand men to employment which gave them support and a chance to climb to positions of greater responsibilty and trust if they had the inclination and ability. About nine out of ten of them threw stones at me because I did not do better for them, and keep pushing them; and yet there are a hundred or so who, by the exercise of their own ability, their own grasp of the situation, have gone on to the accomplishment of such high ambitions and successes, and have appreciated in so many ways the help entended to them by helping others, that again my faith in human nature remains undiminished. — Chauncey M. Depew.

Children at the Table.

Table manners are, or ought to be, an important part of the training of children. If possible, the little folks should always meet with the father, mother and older members of the family at the table. It is not always wise to crowd them off to a side table all by themselves. They should not lead the conversation; they should be taught never to interrupt their elders, but they should be allowed to assist in the conversation which will teach them to express their thoughts intelligently, and parents should see that they use the best language. Children can be easily taught to eat quietly; to avoid noises in swallowing and chewing; to use the fork and not the knife, that with the fingers can be taken bread, fruits and cake; the proper use of the napkin, and that they are not to display any marked likes and dislikes. Older members of the family should be as polite to each other and to the children as to any guest; then you will not be haunted by the fear, that in some unguarded moments the children will bring themselves and you to disgrace, for table manners "are sure indications of social, mental and moral culture."

How to Make Mother Happy.

"Why, mother, how bright and cheerful you look to-night! What has happened?"

"I feel very happy, my dear, because my little boy has really tried to be good all day. Once, when his sister teased him, and he spoke quickly and crossly to her, he turned around a moment after of his own accord and said he was wrong, and asked her to forgive him. I believe I should grow young, or never look tired or unhappy again, if every day my little boy and girl were as thoughtful, unselfish and loving as they have been to-day."

Here's a grand secret for you, little ones; and now that you known how to make mother happy, may you keep her face always full of sunshine!—Scottish Reformer.

Is it not when we come out of ourselves and do something for some other one; when we forget to seek after our own pleasure and seek it for another; when we are lost to our own comfort and find it for those around us — is it not then that we are making happiest the day?

Necessary burdens are not those which ordinarily break men down. The burdens which crush are commonly those which we have no call to bear. If it were really a burden that we ought to carry, our prayer can be that of the old divine, when he said, "Lord, either lighten my burden or strengthen my back;" and we may expect an answer to our prayer. But unnecessary burdens we have no right to ask for added strength to bear. Laying an unnecessary burden down is wiser than letting it break us down.—S. S. Times.

There are two kinds of pews that hinder the pastor and create congregational discontent and disorder. They are the prayerless pew and the empty pew, and both stand condemned of violated vows.—Exchange.

HYGIENE.

Prevention of Consumption.

It has been proved that consumption is always caused by a living germ called the "tubercle bacillus," and that multitudes have it who recover from it; the disease being curable and preventable. It is not a hereditary disease, and can be caused only by the entrance of the germ into the body; but it may be taken from persons who are infected with the disease. The dust of the house may contain the floating germs, and they doubtless might be received from the milk of a tuberculous mother, as they may be from the milk of a diseased cow. These germs may also be thrown off into the air in coughing, and in the expectoration of consumptives, which, when dried, may be pulverized and pass into the air and thus find its way into the lungs.

Rooms of consumptive patients should be freely ventilated, and their expectoration should be discharged into water which has some disinfectant mingled with it. Rooms which consumptives have occupied should be thoroughly disinfected. Cattle should be inspected, that the flesh and milk of consumptive animals may be avoided, and no person employed about consumptives should ever breathe through the mouth. If a man will keep his mouth shut the germs of any disease are not likely to ever pass through the long, moist nasal passages. They get stopped by the way and die; or the saline nasal secretions are quite likely to destroy them. Pure water destroys most disease germs, strong vegetable odors, myrrh, and especially the odor of oil of cinnamon, are deadly to all sorts of disease germs. Probably the odor of onions would be effective.

All these things, of course, are useful while the germs remain outside of the body. When they have got inside the system, then if the general health is well kept up, we shall live and the germs will die. If we get "all run down" in health, then these germs pounce upon us and destroy us.

But tuberculous germs can not work and multiply in the human system unless there is fever or unnatural heat. In the natural temperature of the body they lie dormant. If a man will live outdoors, or in a cold room, keep cool, and even by a cool wet compress upon the chest, or whenever these germs are working, being careful not to take cold, it is probable the disease, if not too far advanced, can be held at bay and eradicated. Everyone knows the hectic fever which marks the presence of consumption. Though feet and hands are cold, there is heat where the disease is working. But if persons not too far gone will bundle up, keep outdoors, avoid warm rooms, breathe cold air, always through the nostrils, and then if they will have some one pound them, gently at first, on the shoulders and chest, with the flat hand, increasing the percussion as they may be able to bear it, and if they will eat good, wholesome food, and dress loosely, in many instances persons will speedily recover from their difficulties, and be strong and well. There is much hope for consumptives if they begin in season, and use wise methods and good common sense.—The Safeguard.

Dr. Bollinger, director of the Anatomico Pathological Institute, in Munich, asserts that it is very rare to find a normal heart and normal kidneys in an adult resident of that city. The reason for the kidney disease is the tax put upon these organs by the drinking of excessive amounts of beer.

Fits Cured

From U.S. Journal of Medicine.

Prof. W. H. Peeke, who makes a specialty of Epilepsy, has without doubt treated and cured more cases than any living Physician; his success is astonishing. We have heard of cases of 20 years' standing cured by him. He publishes a valuable work on this disease, which he sends with a large bottle of his absolute cure, free to any sufferer who may send their P. O. and Express address. We advise anyone wishing a cure to address

Gone to His Reward.

Rev. P. H. Dieffenwierth, the subject of this sketch, was a superannuated member of the Louisiana Conference, M. E. Church, South, and died near Largo, Fla., Dec. 13. He was born in Alsace, in the department of the lower Rhine, in the year 1811, and came to this country with his parents in the year 1818. A sister sickened, died, and was buried in the great deep on the voyage. His parents were both strict Presbyterians, and he was raised with great strictness, and was taught and learned "that to fear God, and keep his commandments, was the whole duty of man." This was manifest throughout his life. Whatever he considered his duty was done.

He joined the Methodist Church, and when he felt the call to preach, like one of old, "he conferred not with flesh and blood," but gave up an offer of partnership in a lucrative business in the house where he had been employed as clerk in the town of Baton Rouge, where his parents then resided, and applied for license to preach. He was admitted on trial in 1836 in the Mississippi Conference; was ordained deacon in 1838, and elder in 1841. His certificate of ordination as elder, signed by Bishop Beverly Waugh, I hold in my hand as I write these lines. Thus a link has been severed that bound the living present with the past of eighty-five years ago.

The deceased was one of the charter members of the Louisiana Conference, having been transferred from the Mississippi Conference. He was cotemporary with B. M. Drake (his first presiding elder), Wm. Winans, John Lane, John Pipes, John G. Jones, W. H. Watkins, Elijah Steele, Joel Saunders, etc. In the year 1841 he was stationed at St. Mary's Chapel—now a part of Felicity Street Church—and during this year went through the yellow fever epidemic in which Elijah Steele fell. The history of his labors, trials, and triumphs, as he has repeated them to us—his children—would have made an entertaining book. He was married twice. His last wife died in 1880, leaving seven children. Six of these, and one by the first marriage, are left to mourn their loss.

For years he was a superannuate of the Louisiana Conference, the last fourteen having been spent in Florida. During these years he has kept one or two regular appointments. At intervals during the last few years he has been a great sufferer, several times having been at death's door, but recovered. His last sickness was of over three months' duration, his mind being perfectly clear and bright till within a few days of his death, when narcotics had to be used to allay the excruciating pain. To everyone who visited him he expressed himself as being perfectly resigned, and even anxious, "to depart and be with Christ," and yet willing to stay, and even suffer, if it was his Father's will. To everyone he had a word of admonition or encouragement.

On one beautiful Sabbath morning, a short time before his death, he called each one of his children and grandchildren to his bedside, placing his hands upon them one by one, invoking Heaven's richest blessings on them, and giving them counsel and cheer. It was one of the richest seasons of grace and manifestations of the presence of the Holy Spirit that it is the privilege of mortals to attend. "Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his!"

"Servant of God, well done!
Rest from thy loved employ;
The battle fought, the victory won,
Enter thy Master's joy."

The pains of death are past,
Labor and sorrow cease,
And, life's long warfare closed at last,
His soul is found in peace.

Soldier of Christ, well done!
Praise be thy new employ;
And while eternal ages run,
Rest in thy Savior's joy.

His son,

J. M. DIEFFENWIERTH.

OBITUARIES.

GRAY—CHARLES GRIFFIN, second son of Charles S. and Mary E. Gray, was born near Cotton Valley, La., in Webster parish, Nov. 6, 1878, and died at his home Dec. 14, 896, aged eighteen years one month and eight days.

Griffin, as he was fondly called by his loved ones, was just on the threshold of promising manhood, possessed of the essential qualities that make a true and noble man. His was a bright and sunny nature, full of hope, love and cheer. Life seemed to hold so much in store for him, and none had a more promising, brighter future than his seemed to be. His nature was undemonstrative, but his quiet, gentle ways drew all with whom he came in contact to him. He was loved by all who knew him and appreciated his worth. He was the idol of his home. He brought into it gladness and sunshine. A true and obedient son, a loyal and affectionate brother, a friend that could be trusted. It seems hard to part with one so young and promising. It seems the world has too few such characters; but God, who doeth all things well, hath wrought, and we can but bow in humble submission to his gracious will. He knoweth what is best for those whom he loveth. If life promised so much, who can tell what God had in store for him? If we had need of him, God had greater need. If we loved him, God loved him more than we. Else God would not have taken him. If he brought sunshine, cheer and gladness in this life, who can tell with what glory he now appeareth? Oh, we deplore and mourn over our loss, but we rejoice over Griffin's eternal gain. Oh, how his home will miss him! Who can tell the mother's heartache? How crushed is the father's heart! With mourning unutterable are the brothers and sisters! Oh, may God fill that vacancy with his divine love, and may the hand that gave and hath taken away heal and comfort the broken-hearted and bereaved ones!

Farewell, loved friend and companion; we will meet again, as we agreed to do, on that bright and celestial shore, where we may dwell forever in divine presence; where sad partings are unknown and "death is swallowed up in victory!"

ROBT. W. VAUGHAN.

TRIMBLE—EUGENIA C. TRIMBLE (nee Whittington) was born in Rapides parish, La., in 1859. She was converted and joined the church under the ministry of Rev. B. F. White in 1886, and departed this life at her home on Bayou Rapides, Dec. 3, 1896.

During her life-time she had been tried in the furnace of affliction as few are tried. In the month of September, 1887, the family had measles. Two of the children died; both little bodies cold in death in the room at the same time. Again, on the twenty-first of August, 1895, two more of the children died. These were carried to the grave in the hearse at the same time, and laid to rest side by side, the writer officiating at the funeral. The mother-heart was torn and bleeding, but amidst all, after the first storm of grief was over there was sweet resignation to the will of God.

From the day she united with the church to the end of her life Sister Trimble was a consistent member. Her last illness was brief. We have every reason to believe that she is at rest. She leaves a husband and six children to mourn her loss.

May the great Father of mercies bless and comfort these while here, and guide them to a better home! J. I. HOFFPAUIR.

DAVIS—ROY DURWOOD, seventh son and child of Henry S. and Olena P. Davis, died Oct. 25, 1896, at their home at Vancleave, Miss., aged nineteen months two weeks and five days. On the following day, at the going down of the sun, we laid to rest the mortal remains of this bright, sweet and lovely little boy in the cold and silent grave; and if the unceasing efforts of fond and loving parents could have saved their darling child, he would be in their fond embrace to-day; but God, in his all-wise providence, has decreed it otherwise, and his precious little spirit is now sweetly resting in the arms of that blessed Jesus, who said, "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of heaven."

Dear brother and sister, we deeply sympathize with you in this hour of sad bereavement. May God bless and save you all!

T. W. ELLIS.

CALHOUN—BAIN, son of D. B. and Esther Calhoun, was born Jan. 27, 1896, and died Oct. 3, 1896.

Bain was a sweet, loving child, and a general favorite of everybody. He was with us only a short time. God saw fit and called him home, where he is waiting to welcome mama, papa, brothers and sisters to that beautiful home. Weep not, dear parents, for the sweet angel that awaits you on the other shore.

Something Good in Dixie

Please understand I am a woman of Indiana, not of Dixie, but do appreciate this good; delight to acknowledge it that all persons afflicted as I have been may know there is hope and happiness for them. I had been a stammerer from childhood; sometimes as unable to speak as though dumb. Had tried several cures, but all of them failed. Then, as a last resort, I tried Rev. G. W. Randolph's Cure for Stuttering or Stammering, and now am CURED. Four days after complying with the requirements of this Cure, I received by mail that which enabled me to talk with such ease and infinite satisfaction, which, to one who endures the affliction as long and severely as I have is a "veritable gladness in the soul." I have never seen Rev. Randolph, but have found him to be a man of his word, and is highly recommended in church circles, also by State officials. His Voice School, or Institute, is located at No. 468 Poplar Street, Memphis, Tenn., and to persons going to this school a cure is GUARANTEED. The Cure by mail gives the same happy results, if instructions are carefully followed, which even children can do, and those needing the benefit of this GOOD will find him so considerate in his terms they need not suffer these afflictions longer. Submitted for the sake of the unfortunate.

MRS. LILLIAN TILMAN,

The Tobacco poisoned heart stops without warning, often on the street. SURE-QUIT, an antidote chewing gum, overcomes the craving. No sickness, no starving, affording safe and prompt relief. Try it to-day. 25c. a box, nearly all druggists. Booklet free. Eureka Chemical Co., Detroit, Mich.

We invite special attention to the ad. of Philip Werlein in this issue. This firm is one of the old landmarks of the city, having been established nearly a half century ago. Those having business in their line would do well to give them a call.

Are You Hard of Hearing or Deaf?

Call on or send stamp for full particulars how to restore your hearing, by one who was deaf for thirty years. John Garmore, Observatory Ave., Mt. Lookout, Cincinnati, O.

I have used Mul-en-ol, and find it good for many things, but especially for cutaneous diseases, cuts, burns, and corns. In every case it has been eminently successful and satisfactory. I do not want to be without it in my family. Please send it right away, and oblige, Yours truly,

Rev. W. M. Leftwich.
